Somalia call-up reaches Kansas

DAVID MAYES/Collegian

Staff Sgt. Kenneth Clauson packs his duffel bag. He and three other soldiers got a call Friday to be at Camp Pendleton, Calif. Monday. From there, they deploy to Somalia. Clauson and the others are members of the 19th Public Affairs Detachment assigned to Fort Riley.

Staff Sgt. Kenneth Clauson was trying to make room for five rolls of toilet paper in his duffle bag. He'd already found room for a two-months' supply of cigarettes.

"There's no 7-Elevens in Somalia," he said. "It's pretty much a matter of being prepared for everything."

Clauson is one of four Fort Riley soldiers scheduled to leave Manhattan Municipal Airport today for Camp Pendleton, Calif. From there, the soldiers will make their way to Somalia.

The soldiers are members of the 19th Public Affairs Detachment at Fort Riley. The detachment is not part of the 1st Infantry Division but is assigned to it.

"We'll be part of the joint information bureau," Clauson said. "We'll be writing news stories, taking photos and assisting civilian journalists."

Capt. Karen Conley of the Fort Riley public affairs office, said the trip was "just part of being in the military." Conley, whose husband and two dogs will remain behind in Kansas, said she was a little nervous about the mission but that she believes in helping people.

The soldiers had little time to prepare for their mission, Clauson said.

"I had a suspicion on Friday and thought a week, maybe longer," he said. "I got a call at 11 p.m. Friday saying we had to be in Camp Pendleton Monday."

The soldiers have no idea how long they'll be at Camp Pendleton before going overseas, Clauson said. They also have no idea how long they'll be in Somalia or even where there going once they get there.

"We can't give you information we don't have," he said.

Which made explaining the situation to Clauson's wife of less then a month a touchy situation. Clauson had plans to visit her in her New Zealand home during January. Those plans are now on hold, indefinitely.

"She works for a newspaper. So, she kind of understands the situation," Clauson said. "She was disappointed, though."

"I hope we can get over there, do what we have to do and get back home."

Air Guard to go, others await orders

TOPEKA — A Kansas Air National Guard unit that was among the first deployed to Operation Desert Storm is also in the first wave of U.S. troops that will aid Somalia in Operation Restore Hope.

The 190th Air Refueling Group flew out of Topeka Friday, just a few hours after officials hastily called a news conference to announce the deployment.

Aircraft and volunteers from the unit will be stationed at a classified location about eight hours from Somalia, Maj. Joy Moser said. The number of Guard members and aircraft on the mission is also being kept secret, Moser said, but the state's Air National Guard has about 1,000 members.

The group will refuel aircraft flying between the United States and the famine-stricken country.

"In the Persian Gulf, the 190th was one of the first units to be mobilized and on site to support that effort," Maj. Gen. James Rueger, Kansas adjutant general, said at the news conference Friday. "Later on tonight, the aircraft that will be leaving will also be one of the lead units in supporting this mission."

The volunteers likely will be on a two- to three-week rotation, officials said.

"I anticipate most people going now will be home for Christmas," Rueger said.

Buck Lyle, a district judge from Hutchinson who commands the unit's 117th Air Refueling Squadron, said the timing of the mission was appropriate to the spirit of the holiday season.

'Tis the season for burglars

Libby Goode returned from her Thanksgiving break to find that about $2,700 worth of her personal belongings had been stolen from her apartment.

"Our TV, stereo, VCR, and all of our jewelry were gone," said Goode, junior in medical technology.

Her story is not an isolated one.

"Especially for the longer breaks, like Christmas and spring break, there are deliberate crimes of opportunity. The people that are doing it know where the students live and that they're out of town," said Sgt. Kim Padgett, Riley County Police Department.

Padgett also emphasized the easiness with which these crimes are carried out.

"It's not hard to pick out an unoccupied apartment. You'll find the north end of town and around the University that there's not too much of a mixture. It's mostly students. They watch for this sort of thing," he said.

Crime does not stop at K-State's boundaries. Theft occurs at both the residence halls and campus buildings over breaks, K-State police said.

"Sometimes there is an increase, because there is no student population. Usually, we anticipate an increase because there is a lack of students in the buildings," said Sgt. Andrew Amaro, K-State Police Department.

Computers have been tampered with in buildings on campus, and Amaro said he fears thefts will increase during the upcoming break.

"There's someone going around removing the parts from computers on campus. They're taking the internal guts of computers, like internal drives, motherboards, integral parts of computers.

"King Hall, Willard, and Seaton are all my main concerns. Because of a lack of activity, there will be an increase. It's just a gut feeling I have," Amaro said.

Preventive measures can be taken, but nothing short of taking everything home is foolproof, Padgett said.

"You can put locks on doors and windows, but if they want to get in, they're going to get in. Nobody's around; it's just a matter of force. The best is having somebody you know will be in town to watch the place.

"I would suggest taking home your TVs, VCRs, and stereos. That's what the people are after," Padgett said.

Three of the apartments in Goode's complex were burglarized. The complex's landlord, Dr. Frank Fishburn, said he was not certain what preventive measures he would take.

"The amount stolen was sizable. They seemed to take a lot of stereos, microwaves. Apparently, about $6,000 worth.

"We're going to change all the locks for one thing. I don't know what they [the tenants] can do. Maybe take some of their stuff home. We're going to have to do something about it. I'm not sure what," Fishburn said.

Goode said she wasn't going to mount any special preventive measures over Christmas break.

"We are probably not going to do anything different. There's nothing left to steal," she said.

Two people have been arrested in part for the thefts that occurred in Goode's apartment complex.

"They robbed 13 other places in and around Aggieville. I guess that's how they got caught," Goode said.

The only difference in security on campus will be closer surveillance.

NEWS DIGEST

▶STUDENTS DIE IN APARTMENT FIRE

CARBONDALE, Ill. (AP) — A fire Sunday at an off-campus apartment complex killed five Southern Illinois University students and sent seven others to hospitals, officials said.

The victims were foreign students living at the Pyramid Apartment complex, said Dr. Jerry Thurman, Jackson County coroner.

The victims — two men and three women, — died from smoke inhalation, Thurman said.

▶HARVARD LIBRARY REVAMPED

CAMBRIDGE, Mass. (AP) — One of the world's largest libraries is joining the computer age.

The catalog of the unparalleled collection of the Harvard University libraries is being transferred from old-fashioned paper cards that date to Abraham Lincoln's first term.

The Harvard library system, with 12.2 million volumes, is larger than that of any other university, and one of the five largest libraries of any kind.

It also is one of the last large libraries to transfer its complete catalog to computers.

Prevention key to deterring crime

The holidays are a time for giving, but not the time to get careless and give to a thief.

Sgt. Stanley Conkwright of the Riley County Police Department said holiday crime starts around Thanksgiving and goes through New Year's Day.

"When people go shopping, they shouldn't leave things on the seats of their cars. Then, those things wouldn't be burglary targets. Instead, they should be putting them in the trunk," Conkwright said.

All tapes and radar detectors should also be placed out of sight if left in a car.

"A tape case full of tapes worth $25-30 makes a pretty nice Christmas present," Conkwright said.

Lt. Robert Mellgren, of the K-State Police Department, advises the "out of sight, out of mind" attitude. He said students want to leave school as soon as possible for the holidays. So, they pack the car up early, leave it unattended, go take a final and come back to a car that has been broken into. He advises common sense and precaution.

"Don't tempt somebody, because somebody is liable to take it," Mellgren said.

When shopping, park close to the building or in a well lit place, Conkwright said. When leaving a building, check things out before you get outside.

"Women shouldn't carry everything in their purse," Conkwright said. "Put license, keys, credit cards and some cash in your front pocket. That way, if they want your purse, let them have it."

There are precautions paoople can take to secure their homes if traveling during the holidays.

"Make the apartment looked lived-in at all times," Conkwright said.

For students, he said, have someone watch your apartment, and take home expensive items such as computers, stereos and televisions.

Kimberly Plummer, employee of McCullough Development Inc., said the company sends out a letter to tenants that advises they leave a light or two on and have newspaper deliveries stopped.

"Employees keep an eye on the apartments and will drive by to check up on things," she said.

Conkwright said the RCPD has a packet that describes devices that help the apartment looked lived-in, such as timers for the lights. He also said people who live in a house can ask for a "vacation security check" from the RCPD. The service includes safety information and the packet describing safety devices. Food drive success in feeding families

30 Days of Thanksgiving raises 23,000 pounds of food, $2,200 for the needy

JENNIFER SHANK

The 30 Days of Thanksgiving drive ended with 23,000 pounds of food and $2,200 donated to the Flint Hills Breadbasket.

Jill Dirksen, junior in architectural engineering and chairwoman of the 30 Days of Thanksgiving committee, said the food drive was successful.

"This was the first year for the food drive. So, we didn't set any goals because we didn't have a precedent to go by," Dirksen said.

The month-long food drive kicked off Oct. 15 in the Union Courtyard. Various colleges set out boxes to collect cans as did residence halls, Greek organizations, clubs and local grocery stores.

Another incentive to donate was the can structure, which was a replica of Anderson Hall. With a 50-cent donation or a can of food, people could guess the number of cans for prizes.

Dirksen, president of the engineering student council, said she was asked by Dean Rathbone, dean of the College of Engineering, if she would be interested in organizing the food drive. She had about a month to plan it.

"I was happy to work with the food drive, because I have always wanted to give back to the Manhattan community, which has been so generous to the students," Dirksen said.

The food drive became a University-wide event and helped to feed over 800 people on Thanksgiving day, she said.

The Student Governing Association also got involved with the drive.

Jackie McClaskey, student body president, said the food drive was one of the first things student government has done to get involved in the community in quite some time.

"I thought it was great, because it pulled together many different people from around campus," McClaskey said.

Forum presents speeches on variety of University issues

"We just don't take from the community. We also give something back,"

BROOKE GRABER, ON THE SPEECH PATHOLOGY AND AUDIOLOGY PROGRAM

Public Speaking II students debate AIDS, GTAs and fees

DAN GRAFEL
Collegian

Six Public Speaking II students spoke on campus issues during a public forum Thursday afternoon in Nichols Theatre.

Brooke Graber, secondary education student, opened the forum with a speech supporting the continuation of the speech pathology and audiology program.

The College of Arts and Sciences has recommended it for de-emphasis within two years under the new Role and Aspirations Statement.

The program is particularly important to her because she is legally deaf, Graber said.

The decision on the fate of the program was made too quickly, she said, as only a one-semester study was conducted.

"We don't just take from the community," she said. "We also give something back."

Teryl Goeckel, a non-traditional junior in education, spoke out against what she felt was the University's lack of concern for non-traditional students like her.

She said despite the fact that 27 percent of K-State students are non-traditional, the Fenix organization for non-traditional students is only budgeted 4 cents for each of these 5,500 students.

Goeckel proposed a survey to be handed out at registration that would ask about all student needs to be considered in budget allocations.

One audience member was concerned, however, that the survey would encourage every small group to demand more money.

"If the survey shows that people are not interested in helping non-traditional students, then they shouldn't," Goeckel said.

The next speaker, Jerrod Burns, sophomore undecided, proposed that all students in the high-risk AIDS category for AIDS be given free HIV tests at Lafene Health Center.

He said a survey could be taken to determine risk level, and high-risk people would receive a free test, while low-risk students would still have to pay the $28 fee.

Concerns from the audience included cost, as well as a debate about the honesty of those surveyed.

In another speech, Diane Conner, sophomore in accounting, said she didn't think graduate teaching assistants were qualified to teach 300-level courses.

She said some solutions are already in the works, such as mock classroom and internship training being implemented.

Audience members were supportive of Conner, as one man commented: "If you don't have the basics down, it compounds the problem."

Karla Matson, senior in accounting, talked about her concerns over parking and traffic safety at Jardine Terrace Apartments.

She said visitor parking will become easier, and traffic after games will decrease because of solutions reached between the K-State Police, Riley County Police and Jardine management.

The final speech, delivered by David Kitchen, freshman in pre-law, called for a private office and telephone line for Bisexual and Gay and Lesbian Society.

When questioned about the number of campus organizations that had an office and phone, he said he didn't know, but BaGaLS' greater need for privacy justified the cost.

Cancer center gets $2 million for research

JENNIFER SHANK
Collegian

The Center for Basic Cancer Research has received a $2 million grant from the Kansas Health Foundation.

Terry Johnson, professor of biology and director of the research center, said the grant will be used for training graduate and post-graduate students in the cancer research program.

"The Cancer Scholar Training Program has existed for five years because of the Kansas Health Foundation, and it will continue for three more," he said. "They have provided an excess of $7 million over a period of eight years."

The center involves three programs, including education, research and research training, and the public outreach information program, Johnson said. Within these programs, cancer cells are studied, research is done in more than 25 different programs, and speakers go out around the state to inform people about cancer.

"The statistic is that cancer strikes one in three Americans," Johnson said. "We are all influenced by cancer, either directly or indirectly."

The public also has provided $80,000 in scholarships to those interested in cancer research, Johnson said.

"There are over 100 individuals working in cancer research alone," he said. "Being able to join the research team is exciting and provides unique experiences for many different majors."

Donald Roufa, professor of biology, said many of the people in the center received doctorate degrees from other institutions in countries such as China, Canada, India, Russia and Spain.

"These people are supported by the grants we have received from the Kansas Health Foundation and are here to obtain training on the aspects of cancer research," he said.

The training for cancer research is carried out at K-State along with University of Kansas Medical Centers in Kansas City and in Wichita.

U.S. has tough job in Somalia

THE ISSUE

The United States has begun sending troops to Somalia to ensure food gets to the nation's starving people.

WE SUGGEST

The United States must stick to its strict mission and get out.

Sending food to hundreds of thousands of starving Somalis is a good idea, and making sure it actually gets to them clearly makes sense.

But for several reasons, the United States must stick to a strict mission during Operation Restore Hope: do the job and get out.

First of all, there are 15 similar cases around the world where justice would be served by humanitarian intervention, a Brookings Institute specialist on Africa said this week.

Restore Hope could set a dangerous precedent that our country would get involved in the variety of war-torn, hungry areas that also need our help.

The scene in the capitol of Mogadishu and the hopes of the Somalian people has been compared to Beirut, Lebanon as it was a decade ago by the Associated Press's Beirut bureau chief at the time.

The U.S. intervention in Beirut ended with nearly 250 American soldiers dead and no peace between the warring factions.

Secretary of Defense Dick Cheney has said U.S. troops should begin turning over some areas of Somalia to U.N. peacekeepers by the end of January.

Sounds like wishful thinking.

He has also said, "If you're looking for the United States to stay until all Somalia's problems are solved — it's not going to happen."

Let's hope he's telling the truth.

Somalia is a worthwhile cause, and the United Nations and the United States can do good there. It is a tragedy for which both are responsible, at least in part, for waiting so long and could perhaps have prevented.

But the mission of the U.S. forces must be clear: Stop the bandits, get the relief to the people and try to disarm the fighting factions. Simply, feed the people and clear the way for U.N. peacekeeping forces and negotiations.

Then, get out.

The United States' continued efforts should be limited to sending humanitarian aid and trying to curtail the flow of weapons into the country once the disarmament is underway.

Harald Prins column on orthodoxy Dec. 1 had a paragraph that read as follows:

"Quite the contrary, students come to the university precisely because it is the place where one goes to learn a trade to capitalize on in the marketplace."

The paragraph should have read:

"Quite the contrary, students come to the university precisely because it is the place where they can expand the frontiers of their knowledge.

"Of course, in today's world where everything, including institutions of higher learning, are geared to respond to the demands of the market place, there are some universities which simply function as diploma mills. They peddle worthless university degrees, including useless doctorates. But, I would also think that the university is more than a place where one goes to learn a trade to capitalize on in the market place."

The Collegian regrets the error.

TOLES

University should only pursue truth

JOHN HART

If you desire to be ridiculed and labeled backwards at this University, I suggest you defend anything labeled orthodoxy.

Harald Prins, professor of anthropology, wrote an essay in the Dec. 1 Collegian about the role and purpose of the University. He said that, as a whole, the University should promote diversity, reject orthodoxy, stimulate dialogue and emphasize creative thinking. These are all reasonable and beneficial suggestions except one: rejecting orthodox, or customary, ideas and established doctrines.

To many in the University community, orthodoxy is a dirty word. It represents stasis and out-dated ideas. However, rejecting orthodox ideas based solely on the "orthodoxy" label seriously undermines the integrity of this University. While sometimes honestly attempting to promote an atmosphere of free and open debate on campus, purveyors of anti-orthodox thinking promote close-mindedness, intolerance and intellectual arrogance. Anti-orthodox agendas encourage students to reject ideas because of the "orthodox" label before investigating and debating the issues at hand. Rejecting ideas just because of the stereotypical title of "orthodoxy," promotes patterns of intolerance and ignorance. It tells students that it's OK to reject an entire body of ideas without first thinking about them.

A college education should be marked by the pursuit of truth, where a student is encouraged to determine fact from fiction. Thus, the only "anti" type of thinking worthy of pursuit is anti-false thinking. At K-State, orthodoxy, as well as every other idea, should be challenged, but not categorically rejected because of political or ideological biases. Every idea deserves to be debated based on its truth or falseness as an idea, without biased labels such as orthodoxy skewing rational thought.

So where does anti-orthodox thinking originate? Perhaps it's an aspect of a political agenda eager to remove a group of ideas from the arena of free and open debate. Orthodox ideas represent the most serious threat to the thousands of liberal ideologues entrenched in our nation's university.

Consequently, promoting anti-orthodox thinking is a convenient way to censor opposing viewpoints by persuading students that orthodoxy is not worthy of being debated on the same plane as "progressive" ideas. If students reject orthodoxy before investigating it, then they will clearly never learn if there is any truth or value in orthodox ideas.

Prins and I do agree that the University should be more than a diploma factory and a training ground for future professionals. It should be a place where students can explore new ideas.

This semester, as a columnist, I've tried to encourage readers to pursue truth with an open mind. I don't expect people to be overly concerned about my opinion, I only hope people are concerned with learning what's true and false. In my columns, I've strived to provoke thought by discussing ideas that are generally rejected on a liberal campus.

My goal has never been to impose my values on anyone or shove my religious beliefs down anyone's throat. I have neither the means nor the desire to force people to act a certain way. The only person that can decide your direction in life is you. As a journalist, all I can do is write persuasive columns on a variety of germane topics.

My aim has also not been to incite anger and divide people or to see how many letters to the editor I can receive. Nevertheless, an honest and bold journey into investigating truth is divisive by nature because it involves suggesting that not everyone's ideas and beliefs are right. No, I'm not claiming to have a knowledge of absolute truth. I have as much to learn as anyone else.

I challenge students to have an open mind and view their college experience as an opportunity to investigate strange and unusual ideas. Orthodoxy is out of style at K-State, so those who accept orthodox ideas are truly worthy of the title "alternative." Orthodoxy may deserve to be rejected, but you will never know if you aren't open to investigating it.

HOMELESS

Answer to problem lies within students

Editor,

I want to express my concern about the homeless at the local level. The Collegian article on homelessness struck a sore spot. I feel that many K-State students don't realize the homeless problem here in Manhattan.

I am writing this letter to urge K-State students to become involved in resolving the problem of homlessness. Students can volunteer their time at area help centers assisting with re-training programs, making meals and sorting clothing to be distributed. Students can also donate household items and food to these centers.

Volunteering only a few hours per week can help turn this problem around. If we as students want help from the community, then we as students need to help the community.

No sex is best birth, disease control of all

Editor,

This is in regard to the Dec. 1 issue of the Collegian. I was very interested in the articles concerning the sexual topics of AIDS, condoms and pregnancies of young adults.

I found it very interesting that there have been almost 25 women with unplanned pregnancies who have taken advantage of the free services of the Kansas Children's Service League (KCSL). The most intriguing point was that the ages of these women ranged from 12 to 22. Age 12!

This figure is very astonishing to me. I can't see a sixth-grader having a child. She is a child herself. I think sex education in schools should be taught at an earlier age. Also, the schools should improve their sex education classes.

I have come up with a plan that is currently being used in Maryland. It teaches our children that the word "virgin" is not a dirty word, and that the best sex of all is none at all! If we could teach our children that the best sex is none at all, we might be able to decrease the rate of unplanned pregnancies and AIDS cases. And then we wouldn't have to deal with the problem of "free condoms" in schools.

FROM SEX TO SEXES

Poor communication main culprit in battle

Editor,

"There are two people in this world who understand women ... and no one knows who they are."

No one can deny that this joke by Woody Allen is funny and has a lot of truth to it. However, the misunderstanding comes from both sexes, and unfortunately, the end result is not always humorous.

It wasn't until I gave a speech this year dealing with the problems between men and women, that I realized how serious the problem of miscommunication is.

One of the problems I discussed was, of course, rape. I looked at the very beginning of the problem. Men and women don't know what is going on in each other's heads. We've all known that already, but when I interviewed several men and women on campus, it was shocking just how clueless these people really were when they thought they had a good idea of what was going on.

There were so many misconceptions and communication variances between them, that a conflict, such as rape, is almost inevitable. The point is that rape is indeed terrible, but the only way to really stop it is to start where the problem really begins: miscommunication.

So, I challenge all the men and women on campus to lower some of their fronts and actually get into a true and honest conversation with each other, and learn a few things about each other.

I would also urge everyone to try to attend some of the sessions on rape prevention being sponsored by the Women's Resource Center. The sessions are every Wednesday in Holton Hall 206 and last only one hour. Please try to attend.

COUNSELING

Pregnancy services may harbor bias

Editor,

I appreciated Megan Mullikin's article on unbiased pregnancy counseling on and off campus, but I would like to call attention to an important agency that she missed. Namely, the Riley County Health Department, which provides free pregnancy tests as well as unbiased counseling.

I truly hope that Kim Menard of the Kansas Children's Service League provides unbiased counseling; yet I am unnerved by the following quote attributed to her: "We can meet with the whole group if that's what the mother wants." I believe "pregnant woman" would have been a better choice than "mother," since a mother is one who has already given birth. Language can reveal bias.

I am also concerned both by Mernard's and Gail Senock's (director of Women's Clinic at Lafene Health Center) remarks regarding the emotional effects of abortion. Those remarks are consistent with those made by the anti-abortion Reagan/Bush camp that tried to force the surgeon general to say that abortions damage a woman's mental health.

Though the surgeon general answered to the president and was generally eager to please, he refused to issue such a statement because there was no supporting evidence.

I urge women to consider very carefully their choice of a facility when seeking pregnancy counseling.

CAMPUS

Placement center offers services to assist students

JANET SATTERLEE
Collegian

The Career Planning and Placement Center is offering three services and programs to make finding a job or internship for students easier.

The first service offers students part-time work opportunities on- and off-campus.

"Because of the competition in the job market, we want this to be a student service," said Rob LiPuma, graduate assistant in part-time student employment.

Jobs will continue to be advertised on the job board in the K-State Union. The board lists a description and a number. Students should record the job number and then go the Career Center in Holtz Hall with a student ID for contact information to set up an interview.

"Students should note if work study is preferred or required," LiPuma said. Some jobs require work study, and others only prefer it.

The purpose for the change in part-time employment is to increase the number of jobs and to reduce the number of applicants, LiPuma said.

The center is actively seeking employers from approximately 600 businesses in the community to participate in the program.

LiPuma said the center is open to suggestions from students on how to improve the job board and the work study process. Students can contact either LiPuma or Mercedes Downing at the Center.

The center also offers an alumni network program, which gives students access to professionals who are K-State graduates.

"We would like to have 25 alumni per curricula," center director Jim Akin said.

The network helps students to get further job information and to get assistance in obtaining an internship.

To prepare for internships, the Center offers a third service, which is an interview clinic program. Akin said the program began in the College of Agriculture in 1989.

Employers come to campus and give students the chance to participate in mock interviews, he said. Then each "candidate" is critiqued on the interview.

Akin said the program allows students to identify strengths and weaknesses in the interviewing process. He said this has been a popular program.

"This program is one of our success stories," Akin said.

'Alumni Connections' help students find jobs

LANA SCHRATER
Collegian

Today's job hunting students can increase their employment chances by contacting alumni sources here on campus.

The "Alumni Connections" is a networking tool for students looking for a job or internship, said James Akin, director of Career Planning and Placement Center.

"One of the reasons the program is successful is because students are more comfortable approaching alumni, because they have that K-State connection," center career advisor Sara Doornbos said.

In conjunction with the Alumni Association, the center has been able to contact alumni in large cities throughout the United States. The objective is to have five alumni in each of five cities on file for students to contact during their job search.

"Our goal is to have 25 people for each major across campus," Akin said.

The names of our alumni give students somewhere to start their job search. They can just be a source to talk with about the field, or a contact to send a resume to, said Tracey Fraser, assistant director of the Center.

"As a result of this program, people are able to secure internships and jobs," Fraser said.

The program has also been a way for the center to network with alumni. Alumni have sent job information to the center, visited campus, or had their place of employment visit, to interview for internships and jobs.

"Alumni are responding very well," Akin said. "We are getting more alumni wanting to participate than we had planned."

The Alumni Connections has books for the colleges of Human Ecology and Business Administration that are complete. In a year and a half, the center plans to have every college completed, Akin said.

The program is open for all students to use, just like all the other resources the center has to offer, Fraser said. Once a students graduate they can use the center's services for three months free of charge, just like a student. After the three months, they have alumni status.

Alumni have access to one advising session, the career library and workshops and career information sessions. They can also establish an alumni file or update an inactive one, free of charge. There is a charge for additional services.

The Alumni Connections started development in the summer of 1990. The program was started because it just seemed like a good idea, Akin said.

"The job market is pathetic, but through our services, students have been able to find jobs," Akin said.

He said he does not see any change in the original perception of the program until it is completely done and evaluations can be performed.

Career Planning and Placement Center

The center offers several services to assist students in finding employment.

- Part-time job opportunities on and off campus for students.
- Alumni network program where students have access to K-State graduates.
- Interview clinic program, which provides "mock interviews" for students and gives them feedback on the interview from the interviewer.

Wildcats overcome late letdown

MARGARET CLARKIN/Collegian

Hamilton Strickland, K-State center, tries to get a handle on the ball under the basket during the Cats' 86-63 victory against Lafayette.

But 86-63 win creates concerns for K-State

STEVE ROCK
Collegian

Paced by double-digit scoring from six Cats, the K-State men won the second of two games against Lafayette, defeating the Leopards 86-63 Saturday night in Bramlage Coliseum.

But K-State's late letdown, which allowed the Leopards to pull within five points midway through the second half, has Coach Dana Altman concerned.

"That's four times in a row now that that's happened — our two exhibition games and both games," he said. "In all four games, we've had big leads in the second half and let those leads slip."

Sparked by a pair of Vincent Jackson 3-pointers, the 2-0 Cats opened the second half with an early 17-4 run. That put K-State up by 18 with 15 minutes left.

"We had a little stretch there at the start of the second half where I think we were playing pretty well," Altman said. "Defensively and on the boards, we were very active, and that got us our lead."

But then K-State let the Leopards claw back.

The Wildcat lead was cut by 13 points when Lafayette put together a 17-4 run of its own. Things were going so bad for K-State at one point, in fact, that Jerrell Roberson and Hamilton Strickland, fighting for a defensive rebound, tipped the ball into the Leopard basket.

But the reason for the letdown, Altman said, was the defensive lapse and the poor execution rebounding.

"One thing our team has to realize," he said, "is that if we don't do those two things — it doesn't matter who we're playing against — we're not going to be successful."

The statistics indicate that the Wildcats out-rebounded the Leopards 41-37 and forced Lafayette into 26 turnovers.

But stats aren't everything.

"Defensively, I thought we'd be more solid than we are," Altman said. "And we have to rebound much better. We don't have the size, and we're not blocking out."

And once conference play begins, those halftime leads might just slip away.

"Defense and rebounding is going to be the key, and we found that out," said point guard Anthony Beane, who had 14 points and just two turnovers.

"In the Big Eight, nine times out of 10 if you let the other team back in the game, you'll lose."

K-State finished the game positively, rattling off a 24-4 run and holding Lafayette scoreless for a seven-minute stretch.

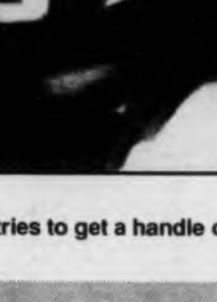
Jackson led the Cats with 18 points, but he was just one of six players who scored in double digits for K-State. And the ability of many of the Cats to step up overshadowed Askia Jones' 10-point performance. He connected on just five of his 16 shots, including none of his seven 3-point attempts.

"Ski just didn't shoot the ball at all," Altman said. "It was really good that some other people stepped it up.

Perhaps hampered by snowy weather and, more importantly, preseason picks that tab the Cats as the seventh-place team in the Big Eight, 5,398 fans witnessed the game — just 11 more than the Bramlage low.

K-State's next game is at 7:30 Tuesday night at home against Ohio.

Jackson turns it up against Lafayette



"I've got to pick it up a bit. This year, I've got to be a leader."

VINCENT JACKSON
Wildcat guard

SCOTT ABEL
Collegian

The real Vincent Jackson showed up when K-State needed him most Saturday night.

The forward scored 18 points against the Lafayette Leopards, including 10 in a decisive run at the start of the second half that propelled the Wildcats to a 86-63 win at Bramlage Coliseum.

Jackson

"I've got to pick it up," the senior said. "This year, I've got to be a leader.

"I was squaring up and hitting the open shot, which loosened me up a little bit."

Jackson's performance was a complete reversal from the Cats last game against Coppin State, in which he had only three field goals with five turnovers. Saturday night, he had only one turnover in 32 minutes of court time.

"He had a real good stretch for us," Coach Altman said. "When he shoots the ball well, his defense picks up at the same time. He shut down his man defensively in the second half, and that helped us get the big lead."

Jackson said his intensity at practice over the last week has been a key to his improvement.

"I wasn't having good ones early," he said. "I was just too relaxed at practice, and was just kind of there, going through the motions."

"But the coaches have been staying on me hard, and that helped me turn it around," he said.

"When I'm doing good things on defense, my adrenaline gets going and it helps my shooting.

"I wanted to get my shot off, and (Anthony) Beane fed me some good balls that I nailed down."

Jackson said his shooting touch was an area he concentrated on in the off-season.

"I got to score more this season, and I worked on my shot a lot this summer. I need to let everybody know I can shoot and have an impact on the game."

Jackson's performance helped smooth over the rocky shooting of his junior wingmate, Askia Jones. Jones had a 5-for-16 shooting night, 0-for-7 from three-point range.

"Ski's going to have an off night sometimes, and I'm going to have off nights," Jackson said. "We just need to get to the point where we're consistent enough that we don't have to depend on one player.

COCA COLA BOWL

Football season ends with 38-24 loss to Nebraska

ASSOCIATED PRESS

TOKYO — The No. 11 Nebraska Cornhuskers clinched their third Orange Bowl bid in five years and overshadowed the best collegiate performance by K-State quarterback Matt Garber in their 38-24 victory in Japan.

Garber played the entire game for the Cats, completing 19 of 29 passes for 246 yards. He threw a pair of touchdowns and also ran for the Wildcats' third score. He didn't throw an interception, and he caught a pass.

K-State Athletic Director Milt Richards said Garber "played the best game of his life."

"Our offense worked today like we hoped it would work all season," he said.

But Nebraska's offense worked better in a scoring show that pleased the 50,000 mostly Japanese fans in the Tokyo Dome watching the annual Coca Cola Bowl, the only NCAA regular season game played outside the United States.

The pass plays were working fine for Husker quarterback Tommie Frazier — especially the two that turned into touchdown runs.

Frazier ended up passing for one and running for three touchdowns for the day. He threw for 128 yards on the day.

The Cornhuskers clinched the Big Eight championship with a 6-1 conference record and, at 9-2 overall, reached their 24th consecutive nine-win season.

K-State ended at 5-6 overall, 2-5 in the conference. K-State hasn't beaten Nebraska since 1968.

Nebraska first scored 8 1/2 minutes into the game with a Frazier 18-yard touchdown pass to Corey Dixon. The next two times Nebraska had the ball, Frazier ended the drive by trying to pass for touchdowns.

The first time, he scrambled 19 yards for a touchdown.

The second, "I just saw a man coming and I avoided him" — and kept going into the end zone.

Meanwhile, Calvin Jones went well over his average 90 yards a game, carrying for 186 yards.

Garber led K-State's first scoring drive when the Wildcats were down 21-0 midway through the second quarter, hitting Andre Coleman for the final 10 yards. He also hit Coleman with passes of 12 and 28 yards and Brad Seib with a 23-yard toss.

K-State cut its deficit to 21-10 by halftime on Tate Wright's 40-yard field goal with 2:27 left.

Nebraska regained the initiative in the third quarter with Jones' 38-yard touchdown run.

The Cats narrowed their deficit to 31-17 on Garber's 8-yard run 2 1/2 minutes into the fourth quarter after the Wildcats twice kept the drive going with fourth-and-short plays from inside the Nebraska 22.

But on its next possession, Nebraska went up 38-17. Cory Schlesinger succeeded on a third-and-one plunge to the KSU 20, and five plays later, Frazier dived in from the 1.

K-State scored the final touchdown on a 21-yard pass from Garber to Seib with 1:20 left in a drive that covered 74 yards in seven plays.

The Cornhuskers were clobbered by Miami 22-0 in last season's game and lost 23-3 to Miami in 1989.

NATIONAL FOOTBALL LEAGUE

L.A. Raiders beat Chiefs, 28-7

ASSOCIATED PRESS

LOS ANGELES — The on-again, off-again Los Angeles Raiders were on Sunday, keeping their slim playoff hopes alive.

Jay Schroeder threw three touchdown passes, and Elvis Patterson blocked a punt and recovered it for another score as the Raiders beat up on Kansas City 28-7. That snapped a six-game losing streak to the Chiefs dating back to 1989.

The Raiders are 6-7 with three games remaining, while the Chiefs, who had a four-game winning streak snapped, fell to 8-5 and into a tie for first place in the AFC West with San Diego.

"I don't think they took us seriously today," Raiders safety Eddie Anderson said. "They came in talking a lot. But we just shut them down. Today, we showed up."

The Raiders went ahead for good by finishing off an opening drive, something they've failed to do so often this season. Schroeder's 6-yard pass to Ethan Horton on third-and-3 capped a 57-yard, 10-play march.

"The playoff door is still a little open, and we are trying to shove our shoe into it."

It became 14-0 less than three minutes after the Schroeder-to-Horton pass when Patterson blocked a punt by Bryan Barker and recovered the ball in the end zone.

"From watching films, I thought they had a slow-acting punter," Patterson said. "The snapper had a hitch, so I just took off and got my hand on the ball.

"This could not have come at a better time for me. I've felt I am special teams, and it's about time we did something. All year, we've been beating ourselves. Today, we did not."

The Raiders had 14 points in less than 10 minutes after scoring only 29 first-quarter points in their previous 12 games. As it turned out, 14 points were enough for a victory.

"In the circumstances we're in right now, they came out with a lot of pride and I'm very proud of what they did today," Raiders coach Art Shell said of his players. "They showed great effort."

Barker injured his left shoulder while trying to get to the ball on the blocked punt, forcing placekicker Nick Lowery to handle the Chief's punting the rest of the day. Lowery hadn't punted since high school.

"All I can remember is that the punt was blocked," Barker said. "I tried to bat it out of the end zone and I ended up lying there."

Barker said he didn't know how serious his injury is.

Los Angeles made it 21-0 on an 11-yard pass from Schroeder to Steve Smith with 6:18 left before halftime, capping a 35-yard drive after a 39-yard punt by Lowery was returned 10 yards by Tim Brown.

The Chiefs were held without a first down until Dave Krieg threw an 18-yard pass to Keith Cash two plays after the Raiders scored their third touchdown.

Shortly after, Terry McDaniel recovered a fumble by J.J. Birden in the air and returned it 40 yards to the Kansas City 15. However, Neil Smith deflected a second-down pass by Schroeder high into the air and Tracy Simien was in the right place to intercept it.

The Chiefs then moved 88 yards in six plays, scoring their only points on a 2-yard pass from Krieg to Cash with 1:07 to go in the half to make it 21-7.

The Chiefs got to the Raiders' 6 early in the third quarter, but Dan Land intercepted a pass in the end zone. That turned out to be the final time Kansas City would threaten until the outcome was decided.

The Raiders made it 28-7 with 19 seconds left in the third quarter on a 17-yard pass from Schroeder to Willie Gault.

Schroeder completed 12 of 18 passes for 93 yards with two interceptions. Eric Dickerson led the Raiders in rushing with 77 yards on 23 carries.

Kansas City's running game was ineffective throughout. The Chiefs ran the ball only four times in the second half and finished with a net of 17 yards on 14 carries.

"Basically, what we decided to do after we got down was to throw the football," Chiefs coach Marty Schottenheimer said. "We had our opportunities. That's a good football team we played. They clearly outplayed us today.

The Chiefs entertain New England (2-11) next Sunday while the Raiders visit Miami (8-5) a week from Monday night.

Krieg, under pressure all day, completed 18 of 33 passes for 276 yards with one interception and was sacked four times.

The Chiefs finished with 12 first downs and 265 yards in total offense while the Raiders had 15 first downs and 230 yards total.

CHIEFS ROUNDUP

- The Raiders snapped the Chiefs' four-game winning streak and their own six-game losing streak against Kansas City.
- The Chiefs had a total of 14 rushing yards on 17 carries.

Lady Cats improve to 3-0

MARGARET CLARKIN/Collegian

48-41 win saved with strong play under the basket

BRIAN ANDERSON

Collegian

The prediction made by senior forward Leah Honeycutt came true Saturday night.

After the Lady Cats' win over Missouri-Rolla Tuesday, the K-State captain said they would end the week 3-0.

She was right.

Honeycutt pulled down a game-high 12 rebounds and scored eight points to give K-State a 48-41 win over Lafayette in Bramlage Coliseum. The 3-0 start is the best since the 1988-89 season.

"I thought we would be and should be 3-0," Coach Susan Yow said after the game. "I'm real pleased with our effort on defense and on the boards.

"I'm pleased with our 46 rebounds," she said. "We doubled their rebounding output."

The Leopards were held to just 23 boards.

"We have been stressing more on rebounding in practice," said sophomore forward Shanele Stires, who contributed 11 rebounds and 19 points to the Lady Cats' victory. "It was easier to see the ball on offense. We knew when it was shot."

"We were quicker to the boards," Honeycutt said. "But we need to increase our offense efficiency."

K-State committed 35 turnovers, 20 of which came from the guards.

"We almost shot ourselves in the foot on offense," Yow said. "Our guard play was out of sync."

Lafayette stole the ball 24 times. More than half of them were from guard Heidi Caruso, who posted a career-high 14.

Last year, Caruso finished third in NCAA Division I in steals per game with 4.97.

"We built her up," Yow said. "She had some questionable steals. She became more aggressive as she got more steals."

The Lady Cats jumped out early in the first half with 10 points from Stires, two 3-pointers from junior guard Andrea O'Neal and six points from sophomore forward Pam Stoltz to take a 30-18 halftime lead.

Caruso rallied the Leopards with one of her 10 steals at the 9:50 mark to get Lafayette to within six points at 39-33.

Stires and Honeycutt moved the lead to 10 with back-to-back baskets.

Stephanie Hayes, who finished with 10 points for the Leopards, scored six in a row from the perimeter to get Lafayette back into the game with five minutes to play.

But Lafayette wouldn't get closer, as Stires and O'Neal made three free throws to open the margin.

Senior guard Kelly Moylan, who had been averaging 11.5 points per game, made her first basket of the game with 35 seconds to play, ending the Leopards' hopes.

The Lady Cats return to the court at 7 p.m. Thursday in Bramlage when they take on Oral Roberts. K-State escaped from the Lady Titans last year with 66-64 win in Manhattan.

SPORTS DIGEST

▶49ERS' RICE SETS TD RECORD

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — Jerry Rice became the NFL's career leader in touchdown receptions when he caught his 101st scoring pass during the fourth quarter of the San Francisco 49ers' game with the Miami Dolphins on Sunday.

With the catch, Rice surpassed Steve Largent's standard of 100. Rice had tied Largent last week when he caught his 100th against Philadelphia.

He achieved the record in his eighth season. Largent played 14 years for the Seattle Seahawks.

▶ANGELS TRADE ABBOTT TO YANKS

LOUISVILLE, Ky. (AP) — Jim Abbott, the one-handed pitcher who overcame long odds to become a successful major leaguer, was traded from the California Angels to the New York Yankees on Sunday night.

The 25-year-old left-hander was sent to New York for a package that included infielder J.T. Snow, left-hander Jerry Nielsen and right-hander Russ Springer.

Abbott was 7-15 with a 2.77 ERA last season for an Angels team that went 72-90.

▶PLANS TO SIGN BONDS FALL THRU

LOUISVILLE, Ky. (AP) — Free agent Barry Bonds who was supposed to become the highest paid baseball player in baseball history Sunday has not yet signed with the San Francisco Giants.

In a development as shocking as Saturday's announcement of a tentative agreement, the Giants said Sunday night that no news conference would be held. Both sides said talks were continuing and that the tentative $43.75 million, six-year agreement still existed.

"We're confident that it will be worked out," Larry Baer, the Giants' incoming executive vice president said when he finally came to the press room at 1 a.m. EST Monday morning (12 a.m CST).

"It's just a delay," Dennis Gilbert, Bonds' agent, said about $18.4 million.

Bonds' pact would be by far the richest in baseball history, surpassing Cal Ripken's total package of $32.5 million and Ryne Sandberg's annual average of $7.1 million.

TRACK AND FIELD

Ward, Wentland qualify for indoor nationals at 1st meet

FRANK KLEEMANN

Collegian

It is still early in the season, but K-State's track and field athletes showed Saturday at the KSU Allcomers meet that they have the potential to battle for the league titles in February.

Interim coach Cliff Rovelto said newcomers and those returning have proven in the first meet of the indoor season that they are ready for upcoming competitions.

"Overall, we have to be real pleased with this meet," he said. "We had a lot of good events for this time in the season."

Junior Gwen Wentland and senior Christy Ward highlighted the meet at Ahearn Field House by reaching the provisional qualification for the national indoor championships in March at Indianapolis.

Ward won the shot put with a throw of 48 feet, 8 inches. Throwing coach Jesse Stuart said Ward traditionally improves throughout the season. So, the first meet is an indication of what last year's all-American can do.

"For this time of the year, it was a good start," he said. "It was a good meet, and she showed she is in shape."

Wentland flopped 6 feet, 3/4 inches to win in the high jump. Having a good practice week behind her, she said, gave her confidence to jump well in this meet.

"I expected to jump at least 6-foot," she said. "I had a lot of technical problems, but if I can make 6 feet with problems, imagine how high I can jump without them."

Rovelto said the team is ahead at this point of the season compared to last year. In particular, concerning the ability to have one athlete competing in different events on one day, the Cats have improved. That's what K-State has to accomplish, he said, in order to compete for the conference titles.

Besides Ward and Wentland, the Cats had some other performances that gave hope for a successful year.

In the women's long jump, freshman Rahma Mateen won the event with 19 feet, 5 1/2 inches in front of two other Cats. Rovelto said those three would have placed between second and fourth place at last year's Big Eight indoor meet.

"The long jump — boy, that's impressive," he said. "That's really good, plus those jumps were with shorter approaches."

Mateen also jumped 5 feet 7 inches high and ran a 61.5-second leg in the 1,600-meter relay for K-State's B-team.

"Rahma is really talented," Rovelto said. "She's 17 years old. My guess is, in two years from now, she will be one of the best young heptathletes in the country."

Freshman Linda Shea won the 600 yards with a time of 1:25.49.

"For a freshman, I can't tell you how good it is," Rovelto said. "It was a hell of a run."

Other winners were Verida Walter in the 55 meters hurdles, after placing second in long jump, and Nicole Green in the 400 meters. Kathy Janicke won the triple jump.

On the men's side, K-State hasn't had as many competitors in the field as the women, but they still had some strong performances.

Decathletes Troy Adkins and Jason Meredith led the team.

Adkins won the long jump, ran the 55-meter dash in 6.65 seconds and had the best leg in the 1,600-meter relay with 50.1 seconds.

Meredith cleared 13 feet, 6 1/4 inches in the pole vault and opened the relay with a 50.4-second round.

Brian McAlpin won the 400 meters, Chris Pryor the 200 meters and Ed Broxterman the high jump.

"Basically, all it was, was a glorified practice," Rovelto said, "to give them a chance to see where they are at. Overall, it was pretty good."

"If I can make 6 feet with problems, imagine how high I can jump without them."

MUSIC

New age album full of light sounds, rhythm

ERIC BRUNT
Special to the Collegian

It has been nine years since Special EFX was born, and now George Jinda feels it's time for something different.

This is a new collaboration for Jinda, and it shows that even away from Special EFX, George still has what it takes. This time he is backed by the trio, World News.

The album starts off with a song that can take you almost anywhere. "With A Message" can depict a quiet dinner at a beachside cafe or maybe just cruising down in the hills of Texas. This blend of light percussion, rhythm and acoustic guitar, and flowing keyboards will take you anywhere you want to go.

"Springshot" and "Mariella" still keep you in the seaside cruising mode with a Latino tempo and added percussion. They can also take you a little closer to reality and put you right outside Last Chance.

Track three, "Luscious Rebecca," is the one you want for aggressive action, such as being on the Dallas freeway or chasing down that desired companion. The percussion changes again, but the lead is done with guitar synthesizers, a nice touch.

"Seven Unfinished Dreams" opens with a wistful acoustic guitar that brings you out of bed and gets you started for the day. The rhythmic detours on this track can also depict a stroll around the park. Very similar is "Snowbound," which puts you a step further in the morning when you're late for that important meeting and it's snowing like crazy outside.

"It Could Have Been You" slows things and puts you in a calm mood. We hear a lot more bright sounds on this track than the first three songs. The sensual flow of the piano work, trading off with the guitar work, both backed by the Latino percussion and a strong bass, give you music to be alone with.

The next song takes you shopping in K.C., so don't spend too much money. "Sheila's Carribean Skirt" has a Mexican influence. We also see vocals, for the first time on the album, from Carol Vito. They are incorporated into the song like any other instrument. Other guest musicians are also on this track, such as Mark Johnson on tenor and soprano sax, and Lionel Cordew on drums.

So, you drank too much in K.C. and now you have a hangover, or maybe you're driving through some fog with that uncertain feeling. The song "For Miles," a tribute to Miles Davis, is more dynamic than the rest of the songs on the album.

Holiday early for kids of Big Brothers/ Big Sisters

DAN GRAFEL
Collegian

Christmas came early for about 25 kids in the Manhattan and Ogden area.

The children, who are part of the Big Brothers/Big Sisters program, had a Christmas party in the Union Courtyard Friday.

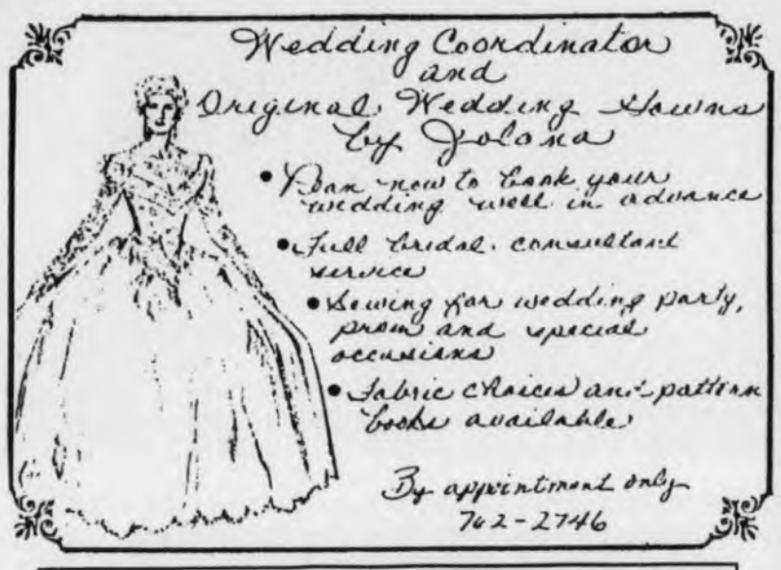
Audra Knop, senior in elementary education and Mortar Board member, said her organization collected toys from living groups on- and off-campus to give away at the party.

"We have done this now for a couple of years, and it's been really successful," Knop said.

"I'm dying for a pair of roller skates," said six-year-old Crystal Aguilar of Ogden.

Aguilar is on the waiting list for a Big Sister, as are many of the children at the party.

Santa Claus was on hand to distribute the presents to the anxious children.



"It's really fun to see the kids' faces light up when they get their gifts," Knop said.

Marc Scarbrough, co-program chairman for Mortar Board, said the group collected enough toys for about 50 kids, and the extras would be donated to the Toys for Tots drop-off in Manhattan Town Center.

Besides Santa's visit, other highlights included a scavenger hunt and story time presented by K-State students in storytelling class.

Stephanie Pryor, junior in psychology, told the "True Story of the Three Little Pigs," from the wolf's perspective.

"I came because it was an extra credit option, but once I talked to the kids, I got a lot of satisfaction from telling them a story," Pryor said.

Georgia band to hit Manhattan

Confederate Railroad sticks to basics by playing rock-oriented country music

TOM LISTER
Collegian

People can expect to hear country with a rocky edge Wednesday night at the Silverado Saloon.

Confederate Railroad, a Georgia-based country band, has made Manhattan a stop on its current tour.

Danny Shirley, lead singer, said the band has a strong Southern rock influence.

"I think a lot of artists like (Garth) Brooks and myself didn't grow up listening to country," Shirley said. "We listened to rock."

Shirley said he saw his first concert, Steppenwolf, in the eighth grade. Other influences, Shirley said, were the Allman Brothers, Lynyrd Skynyrd and the Marshall Tucker Band.

Over the years, Shirley said, he had the opportunity to play with all these bands. In fact, he's been on stage with Steppenwolf to sing "Born to Be Wild."

"Not only was I influenced by these bands," he said, "but I hung out with them."

However, when rock started turning away from its classic roots, he refused to go along with it.

"What happened is, rock got so strange," Shirley said. "If your choice is to listen to music from 15 to 20 years ago, then there's something wrong with rock today."

Eventually, he said, he was turned on to country through "outlaw" acts like Waylon Jennings and Willie Nelson. Since then, country has been his musical outlet.

The band has been together for 11 years, Shirley said.

Confederate Railroad has had the experience to sharpen the outlaw sound for a while, doing double-duty playing back-up for David Allen Coe.

The band has produced three albums as The Danny Shirley Band. Confederate Railroad's current album is self-titled with the new name.

Among the album's songs are "Trashy Women," "Time Off for Bad Behavior" and "Queen of Memphis."

Shirley said the band doesn't try to send any deep messages through its songs.

"Pretty much what I set out to do is have fun, good-time music," he said. "I just want to have fun."

Shirley said the band has plans to go on the road with the group ticket of Lynyrd Skynyrd, Charlie Daniels and Johnny Winter.

The blend of country and country-rock on the ticket isn't such a strange concept, Shirley said.

"Think about it," he said. "If the Eagles or Credence Clearwater Revival came out today, they'd be a country act."

■ Confederate Railroad is playing at 9 p.m. Wednesday at Silverado Saloon.

EDUCATION

Game helps educate students about death

ASSOCIATED PRESS

CASSVILLE, Wis. — A high school science teacher makes his students pass through pregnancy, AIDS, drug overdoses, drunken driving arrests, theft and drug dealing — and try to do it all without ending up in the morgue.

It's all part of a board game teacher Frank Lavelle created to make teen-agers aware of the risks of drugs and sex.

"There are a lot of traps in the game," Lavelle said. "But, you know, real life is like that. The game is basically set up to trace some of the hazards of abuse that teen-agers experience."

Lavelle calls his game "DEAD" for "drugs end all dreams."

He has marketed the game locally and said the National Education Association may use it for alcohol and drug education programs.

"Before you start playing Monopoly as a kid, you really have no concept of money or real estate, and after you lose a couple of times, it makes you stop and think. So, when you get older you have some idea how money and real estate works," Lavelle said last week.

'TIS THE SEASON

Holiday shopping big business

Area merchants encouraged by number of shoppers, mood, amount of purchases

KRISTI STEPHENSON
Collegian

The 1992 Christmas season looks to be a promising one for Manhattan merchants.

"It's been a great year, and I think it's going to get even better," said Charles Elliott, owner of Reed and Elliott Jewelers.

Elliott said he believes that the big business doesn't hit early, and he anticipates a great December.

He said he has noticed that customers are shopping for value.

"People are more aware of quality, and they are shopping to find it," he said. "They don't want to throw money away."

Elliott said he believes Manhattan didn't feel the recession as other cities did. Manhattan was not subjected to as many layoffs with industries that other areas were, he said.

Jim Schottler, employee of Borck Brothers in Westloop, said their Christmas business starts after Thanksgiving.

They had an excellent weekend, and Schottler said he believes if that's any indication, it should be a better year.

"Manhattan doesn't experience the tremendous ups and downs that big cities do," Schottler said.

Jason Schafer-Valerius, assistant manager of Musicland at the Manhattan Town Center Mall, said it is hard to compare this year to last year because the military received bonuses for the Gulf War and were spending more as a result.

"The shopping mood is more optimistic," he said.

The Loft in Aggieville hasn't noticed a significant difference yet, co-owner Sheryl Ballard said.

"It is way too early to tell," Ballard said. "The third week in December was our biggest week last year. That's when we get our men shoppers."

Betty Campbell, owner of Campbell's Gifts, Fifth and Poyntz streets, said she noticed people do not want to overspend and are very conscious of what they spend.

"People are in an overall good mood, and there seems to be as many shoppers as usual," she said.

Hansen donation will help rural media

KIRSTEN NELSON

The Dane G. Hansen Foundation donated $50,000 to the KSU Foundation to help the Huck Boyd National Center for Community Media strengthen newspapers and broadcast media in rural communities.

"It was donated for the knowledge that a good journalism program is necessary to keep small papers in western Kansas alive," said Dane Bales, manager and trustee of the Hansen Foundation. "They don't get enough professional experience."

The Huck Boyd Center will use the money for three things, Director John Neibergall said.

The first project will be a publication showcasing excellence in community journalism.

It will highlight the winners of the National Newspaper Association's Better Newspaper Contest for 1992. The association has twice endorsed this idea, Neibergall said, and with the donation, it will have sufficient funds to carry it out.

"It will introduce journalism students to the best of community newspapers and attract bright talent to these newspapers and communities," he said.

The second project will be conducting regional workshops in this area, Neibergall said.

"It will not only be a benefit to community media in Kansas, but it will also help with our reach throughout communities in the nation," he said.

The donation also will be used for travel around Kansas to get information from publishers and practitioners, including broadcast media, to keep the center in focus with its mission, Neibergall said.

This is the Hansen Foundation's second donation to the Huck Boyd Center. It donated $25,000 last year.

"We've tried hard to use these funds in ways to benefit northwest Kansas. We're real conscious of their mission and try to use them in ways they would like," Neibergall said.

Biology seeking director for newest unit

Fish and Wildlife will fund salaries; position will include full faculty status

LISA COLE
Collegian

The Division of Biology will conduct interviews in two weeks to find a director for K-State's new Cooperative Fisheries and Wildlife Research Unit.

The unit is a partnership among the United States Fish and Wildlife Service, the Division of Biology and the Kansas Department of Wildlife and Parks.

"All three of these have agreed to cooperate on wildlife and fisheries research, primarily to fit the needs of the state," Robert Robel, professor of biology, said.

Robel has been lobbying for such a unit in Kansas since 1963.

There are units in 36 other states, but this is the first one here, he said.

The K-State unit was formed with a cooperative agreement between the three groups in the fall of 1990, Robel said. A leader who was hired in October 1991 has since accepted a research position elsewhere.

A search for an assistant leader was dropped, and the application process for a leader was reopened late last summer, Robel said.

The unit is currently staffed by only a secretary, but it is funding a research project on neo-tropical birds.

Two candidates for the unit leader position will be interviewed in two weeks. Both are employed with the Fish and Wildlife Service — one in Wisconsin and the other in Louisiana.

Robel said a third candidate, who works for the U.S. Department of Agriculture, is being considered.

"We're looking for the best scientist. That scientist can then address many different issues," Robel said.

The objectives of the research unit program are to conduct research in fisheries and wildlife biology, train graduate students to become professional resource managers and to make technical fisheries and wildlife resource information available to natural resource managers and the public.

The program was established in 1935. But it was not until 1960 that Congress authorized the Fish and Wildlife Service to make cooperative agreements.

Each of the three bodies involved in the agreement has a different role.

The Fish and Wildlife Service will provide salaries and some operational money for three scientists to be hired — one unit leader and two assistant leaders. The scientists will have full faculty status at K-State.

K-State will provide office space, lab space, access to utilities, the secretary's salary and some part-time help.

The Department of Wildlife and Parks will provide some operating money and fund the unit's research. It will specify research projects that need to be done in the state.

"The unit is a way to cooperate to do research in an efficient way, utilizing graduate students, faculty and facilities at a university," Robel said.

Without such an agreement, he said, the state or federal government would have to pay extra for facilities and supplies the University already can supply.

Research will be conducted by unit scientists and graduate students they will supervise.

"Most of the units operate with three or four graduate students per federal scientist," Robel said.

The unit can also fund other graduate students researching in areas the Department of Wildlife and Parks wishes to fund.

Jerry Weis, acting director of the Division of Biology, said the three new unit biologists will nearly double the number of faculty in fisheries and wildlife biology. He said this will increase the number of graduate students in that area.

Working with the unit will give graduate students the opportunity to work with personnel from both the state and federal agencies.

South African police knew of attack plans

ASSOCIATED PRESS

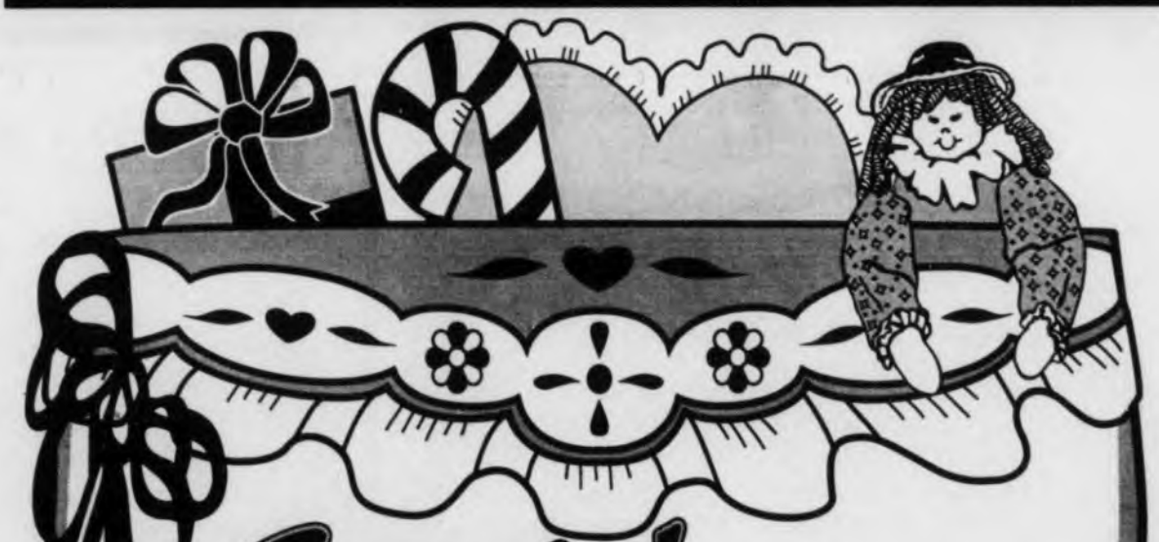
JOHANNESBURG, South Africa — Police knew a radical black group planned a bombing campaign against whites, but decided not to alarm civilians by issuing a warning about the threat, a newspaper said Sunday.

The Sunday Times reported that police minister Hernus Kriel and senior police officers learned in October that the Azanian People's Liberation Army planned to attack white civilians.

The Azanian group has claimed responsibility for two recent attacks on whites, saying they were part of a "shock and show" campaign. The black nationalist group says white civilians are legitimate targets because they aid government security forces.

The attacks frightened many whites and cast a shadow over efforts by the government and the African National Congress, the main black opposition group, to prepare for the country's first multi-racial elections.

A man died Sunday from wounds suffered in one of the Azanian attacks — the bombing of a hospital. Jerome Guse was the first victim to die from the blast, which injured 18 other people in Queenstown, 500 miles south of Johannesburg.



Four whites were killed in the other incident, a Nov. 28 gun and grenade attack on a Christmas party at a country club in nearby King William's Town.

Police say there could be a Christmas bombing campaign with possible targets including movie theaters, schools and churches.

The Azanian group is the military wing of the Pan Africanist Congress, a small, radical group that advocates blacks seizing power and driving out whites. The congress has boycotted the black-white political negotiations.

The Times said Kriel told the Pan Africanist Congress in a Nov. 11 meeting that he was aware Azanian militants planned attacks and appealed for the fighters to be sent "on a holiday for some months." The Times said it had obtained minutes of the meeting.

Senior still has many questions about 'quirks and jerks'

DEAR CASSANDRA,

After being at K-State for four years now, you'd think by the time graduation rolls around I would have figured out many of the "quirks and jerks" of this campus. But, there are a few that I just don't quite have a handle on.

Such as, why does the ceiling in Denison 124 leak? Aren't there at least two floors above this one? I am puzzled.

Why do people call the police on rodents (i.e. skunks, squirrels, possums)? What are the cops to do, arrest these little varmints?

Doesn't the RCPD have better things to do than make sure that people sitting in their cars around noontime are actually eating their lunch?

It seems like some person (or group) is always bitching about budget and class cuts. Wouldn't it make more sense to quit ripping up the landscape and planting new for every season. And is an art museum really necessary? The money for landscaping and the museum could be used for keeping classes open.

Parking is always a problem. I can kill two birds with one stone, landscape expenses and parking. Pave the whole campus — park where you like!

I guess of these, my first question confuses me most. Hope you can help.

Confused Senior

DEAR CONFUSED SENIOR,

The water leak in Denison could be plumbing that has deteriorated, or it could simply be a leaking roof. I suspect the latter. As odd as that may sound, water can, and often does, leak through an opening in a roof and travel far from the entrance point before it is detected coming through the ceiling. This makes tracking down the source of the problem very difficult in a residential home, and almost impossible in a structure the size of some of the buildings on campus. The pull of gravity is relentless and does not discriminate. There is nothing confusing about that.

DEAR CASSANDRA,

There is a guy that I really like, but he doesn't seem to like me as much as I like him. We have messed around and we talk about everything, but he doesn't want a commitment. He claims that his previous girlfriends have turned "psycho" on him.

There have been times that I have stayed over there. (No, we didn't do it.) But in the mornings, I feel bad when he goes off with his buddies. I always feel sad when I leave, because I don't really want to. Should I forget about him and go after someone else, or should I try and convince this guy that I am the one for him? I think that we could just be friends, but I want more.

In Love with the Guy of My Dreams

DEAR IN LOVE,

I am not sure what "turning psycho" means, but I would take this excuse as a hint he is not interested in a serious relationship, which means any further attempts by you would simply be wasted effort. Determination is an admirable quality, but you need something to work with. It does not strike me that much is there.

As for sleeping over and "not doing it," save that for someone who appreciates your companionship. The reason it bothers you is because subconsciously you feel as though you have given something special (You don't spend the night at just any guy's house do you?) to this guy, and all he does is run off with his friends the next morning without giving it a second thought, leaving you with unfulfilled (and unwarranted) expectations. Dream Guy says he is not ready. So leave it at that.

China hurries to deal for arms

Fear of probable harsh Clinton policy spurs frantic talks

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — China is engaging in a flurry of arms dealing, apparently fearing that the incoming Clinton administration will take a harder line toward the weapons trade.

The arms activity — with China at the hub — involves Russia, Libya, Syria, Iran and Pakistan, and deals for missile and other weapons technology, government sources said.

"It's like the end of a fireworks show. They're throwing everything up there," said one official, speaking only on condition of anonymity.

The arms deals have left U.S. national security policymakers wary of a proposed sale of a Cray supercomputer to Beijing.

The computer would be more than one hundred times faster than the most powerful computer the Chinese now have.

On Friday, top Bush administration officials postponed a decision on whether to go ahead with the sale, while they consider the weapons activity and whether the computer might have military uses.

One official said it appears that Beijing believes the incoming Clinton administration will take a far harder line toward its arms exports, and is trying to do as much business as possible before the new administration takes over in January.

As evidence, the official cited the recent Chinese shipment of two dozen M-11 missiles to Pakistan. The missiles were shipped through a port that the Chinese know is watched by U.S. intelligence.

"That's got to mean they don't think we care," the official said. "They're trying to get this done before Clinton comes in."

China is buying weaponry from Russia, whose own arms industry is suffering a depression as the government dramatically cuts its military strength, and re-exporting it to other countries, the official said.

"There is an explosion of deals in the making, and the Chinese are clearly No. 1 in the middle of it," said one source.

On the proposed U.S. computer sale, Commerce Secretary Barbara Franklin had planned to announce a decision during a trip to Beijing 10 days from now. The computer is intended for weather forecasting, and is to be kept under tight security to make sure it is not put to other purposes.

One congressional source said the high-speed computer could be used to help China enhance its targeting of missiles, or to modernize its nuclear weapons guidance systems. "Nobody believes this kind of thing could be secure," he said.

In Friday's meeting, officials from Commerce and the State Department argued for the sale, while the Pentagon, the CIA, and the Arms Control and Disarmament Agency opposed it.

China has been the most reluctant of the Permanent Five members of the U.N. Security Council to conclude an agreement restraining "destabilizing" arms transfers and technology that could be used in chemical, biological and nuclear weapons and missiles.

The other four nations — the United States, Great Britain, France and Russia — had planned to meet in Moscow this month. But China has announced it would withhold its participation out of anger over the Bush administration's sale of 150 F-16 fighter planes to Taiwan.

16th century mosque destroyed by Hindu fundamentalists

ASSOCIATED PRESS

AYODHYA, India — Hindu fundamentalists used pickaxes and crowbars Sunday to raze a 430-year-old mosque they say was built on the site where a main Hindu deity was born. The government declared the nation under its highest security alert, and braced for a Muslim backlash.

At least four Hindu militants were killed and 100 others injured by falling debris as the 16th century Babri Masjid, or Mosque of Babar, was demolished in less than six hours by thousands of frenzied Hindus.

Prime Minister P.V. Narasimha Rao said the destruction of the three-story mosque had pushed the country into "a grave crisis." He appealed for peace in a nationwide television speech.

About 1,000 people were killed in Hindu-Muslim riots that broke out in northern India in 1990 after Hindu extremists stormed the mosque in the longstanding religious dispute. That crisis brought down the government.

In New Delhi, 20 prominent Muslim leaders met with President Shankar Dayal Sharma on Sunday and expressed "deep anguish and pain."

In a rare statement on religious issues, the president condemned the destruction.

"Those who have harmed (the mosque) have caused injury to the centuries-old ethos of India," he said. They have "violated the rule of law, the tradition of India of mutual respect for all religions."

In Jiddah, Saudi Arabia, the 50-nation Organization of the Islamic Conference accused the Indian government of allowing Hindu extremists to demolish the mosque and demanded it punish the culprits.

"The entire Islamic world was shocked by the heinous and premeditated crime against an Islamic symbol of value not to Muslims in India alone, but to Muslims everywhere," said Hamid al-Gabid, secretary-general of the organization, which represents the world's 1 billion Muslims.

More than 300,000 Hindus had made the pilgrimage to Ayodhya, which normally has 41,000 residents, to destroy the mosque and build a colossal temple to Rama.

On Sunday, just before the hour decreed by astrologers as auspicious for the work to begin, dozens of people climbed onto a platform near the mosque to dance and chant slogans.

Pilgrims had set up roadblocks of concrete slabs, furniture and wooden logs to prevent 30 busloads of federal riot police from coming in.

Outnumbered police at the site retreated to a nearby police station and watched as the Hindus, dressed in the orange colors of the fundamentalists, completed their task unhindered.

Hundreds of people poured into the building and used grappling hooks to climb to the mosque's roof. Wielding pickaxes and crowbars, they razed the mosque in defiance of a Supreme Court order and their own leaders' instructions.

Tapes reveal Nixon's desire to plant campaign literature

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — Still-secret White House tapes show Richard Nixon favored planting McGovern campaign literature in the apartment of the man arrested for shooting Alabama Gov. George Wallace, the New Yorker magazine reported Sunday.

Nixon and White House counsel Charles Colson discussed how to exploit the attempted assassination for political gain within hours of the May 15, 1972, shooting, the New Yorker said in a story released Sunday.

They were unable to plant material from Democrat George McGovern's presidential campaign, because the FBI moved too quickly in sealing off the apartment of gunman Arthur Bremer, the magazine article by Seymour M. Hersh said.

Colson told the New Yorker that the idea progressed as far as approaching E. Howard Hunt about flying to Milwaukee where Bremer lived, according to Hersh's article.

Hunt was a retired CIA agent and Colson political operative who served 32 months in prison for the Watergate break-in, which occurred the month after the Wallace shooting.

"I don't know which one of us actually said, 'Too bad we can't plant McGovern literature,'" the New Yorker quoted Colson as telling the magazine.

But the tapes show Nixon berated Colson after being told the idea of planting McGovern literature would not work because the FBI had moved too quickly, the New Yorker said.

Nixon complained on the still-undisclosed tape about the missed opportunity to damage McGovern, the article said.

Many of the tapes relating to the Watergate break-in have been released, but hundreds of additional hours of recordings from the Nixon White House's taping system remain under lock and key at the National Archives. Watergate historian Stanley Kutler has sued archives officials seeking their release, alleging that they relate to the Watergate break-in and other abuses of power.

Separately, a federal appeals court ruled last month that Nixon was entitled to be paid for the seizure of White House papers and tapes from his administration.

According to the magazine, the unreleased tapes also show:

- Businessman Charles G. "Bebe" Rebozo gave the president cash and bought a house for Nixon's younger daughter, Julie, and her husband, David Eisenhower.
- Nixon and White House chief of staff H.R. Haldeman "openly discussed the sale of ambassadorships — to what country, for how much in contributions." Nixon allegedly insisted that people wanting to serve as ambassador in more desirable posts be told they would lose the job after a year unless they made an additional contribution.
- Nixon conducted allegedly improper Oval Office discussions with Chief Justice Warren Burger about Watergate and pending Supreme Court cases. Former Nixon aide John Ehrlichman told the magazine he had first-hand knowledge of the Nixon-Burger conversations, telling the New Yorker, "It bothered me. You bet it did."

down the block, or you're going around the world to help somebody get something to eat, it's the kind of stuff Americans do for Christmas," said Lyle, who is a lieutenant colonel in the guard and a Persian Gulf War veteran.

Nearly 90 percent of the Kansas aircrews participating in the operation are part-time guardsmen, the National Guard said in a statement.

"We had a problem selecting people," said Col. Duane Ellingson, 190th group commander. "We had many more who volunteered than we were asked to send."

A full-time reservist, Senior Master Sgt. Mark Criger, 47, of Overbrook, is going as a field maintenance supervisor. He served in the Persian Gulf, but said this mission is different.

"We're helping people rather than getting ready to fight a war," he said.

His wife, Jo Ellen, was hoping he would be back for Christmas.

"This means I'll be putting up Christmas lights and finishing up the shopping by myself," she said.

Master Sgt. Nancy Stout of Carbondale, a logistician and full-time reservist who is originally from Los Angeles, said her mother was upset when she called her Thursday night to let her know she might be going.

"Trying to convince her we're not going to be in a hostile location was a little tough," Stout said.

At the 89th U.S. Army Reserve Command in Wichita, spokeswoman Kat Gleeson said no Army reservists in Kansas are on alert.

"So far, we're just hearing about active troops," she said. "I don't see any involvement on our part, but time will tell. We're just waiting."

The command is headquarters for Army reservists in Kansas and Nebraska.

About 28,150 soldiers from the United States and other nations are to participate in the operation to restore order and guard food shipments. The first detachment of more than 2,000 French soldiers will be ready to go today, Defense Minister Pierre Joxe said in Paris.

Egypt, Turkey, Mauritania, Kuwait and the United Arab Emirates announced Sunday they would send troops. None released any details, but each appeared to be planning to send several hundred soldiers.

Sunday in the Somalian capital of Mogadishu, relief workers with armed guards riding shotgun broke a month-old siege of Mogadishu's port and sent 100 trucks loaded with food roaring off the docks to the isolated northern half of the capital.

More desperately needed food made it to the central city of Bardera, where three relief planes landed as aid workers were down to their last 25 sacks of grain.

It was the first food to reach Bardera in nine days, but was not soon enough to save the 160 people who died of starvation there Saturday, said Ian MacLeod, a U.N. aid spokesman.

The campus police provide patrol for the fraternities and sororities during the holidays, Mellgren said.

"We do a lot of door shaking," he said.

At times, he said, the police have to call a member of the organization in to secure the house.

"The campus shuts down from Christmas Eve to Jan. 4, except for essential personnel," Mellgren said.

Residence halls are affected the week or two before students leave, but this is not a serious problem, he said.

"It's usually small items people can walk out the door with that are taken," Mellgren said.

For Manhattan merchants, Conkwright said shoplifting increases during the holidays.

Ernest Dickey, Sears general manager, said he sees an increase in bad checks.

"I think all retail is affecteu during this time," he said.

Chris Heavey, Manhattan Town Center general manager, said the mall has an ongoing seminar for merchants geared toward the general shopping center environment.

Marines arriving in torn Somalia

ASSOCIATED PRESS

MOGADISHU, Somalia — Somalis got their first look at U.S. power Monday when Navy warplanes roared over Mogadishu.

Pentagon sources said Marines would land at dawn Wednesday to begin helping the starving people.

The 1,800 Marines standing offshore on three Navy ships are the vanguard of a multinational rescue mission in the war- and famine-wracked nation.

But Pentagon sources said most of the 28,000 U.S. soldiers and Marines committed to the operation might not begin arriving for several days.

Robert Oakley, a special U.S. envoy and former U.S. ambassador to Somalia, arrived Monday to meet with leaders of Somalia's warring clan leaders and with international aid workers to outline plans for the U.S.-led operation.

He stressed that Washington envisioned a humanitarian effort, not a military one.

Oakley told reporters the U.N.-authorized operation would be the opposite of Desert Storm, the mammoth military campaign that dislodged the Iraqi army from Kuwait nearly two years ago.

"We hope it will remain a humanitarian operation all the way through, because the purpose is to protect deliveries of relief supplies, relief workers and relief recipients," Oakley said.

Local resident injured in crash

ASSOCIATED PRESS

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — A plane crashed just short of a Kansas City International Airport runway Monday, killing one and injuring a Manhattan man.

A malfunctioning navigation instrument may have been a factor in the crash, officials said.

Killed was the pilot, John C. Dart, 73, of Belleville. Passenger Wilbur Lala, 46, of Manhattan, was in critical condition Monday night at Liberty Hospital in Kansas City, Mo.

Dart owned the plane.

The plane had flown from Belleville, about 100 miles northwest of Manhattan and 170 miles northwest of Kansas City.

Shortly before the crash, the pilot told the control tower that the gyroscope on the four-passenger Cessna Cardinal II was not working, said Joe McBride, a spokesman for the Kansas City Aviation Department.

The gyroscope tells the pilot the plane's position relative to the ground and is essential in making a landing when visibility is limited, McBride said.

He said Dart twice attempted to land in the early morning darkness and dense fog.

But the tower lost radio contact with the plane about 6:10 a.m. when the plane's wing hit the ground. The aircraft then spun into a cartwheel before it landed nose down in a field.

As fog blanketed the grounds, rescue workers searched for a half-hour before locating the wreckage a few hundred yards from the runway, McBride said.

National Transportation and Safety Board members and officials with the Federal Aviation Administration began inspecting the gyroscope and other wreckage to determine the cause of the crash. No final determination had been made late Monday.

No Rhodes Scholars for K-State

Both finalists say application process was good for them

KIRSTEN NELSON
Collegian

Two K-State students who were finalists for the Rhodes Scholarships were not selected. But both said they benefited from the experience of applying.

Jill Baisinger, senior in history and Spanish from Hays, and Jean Sonnenfield, graduate student in veterinary medicine from Omaha, Neb., were among the finalists from the Midwest region.

K-State has produced eight Rhodes Scholars in the past 18 years, including two who were selected in December 1990.

"I think it's a wonderful experience anytime you do an extensive project like this. It's a learning experience like doing a research project," Sonnenfield said.

"Rhodes wants a well-rounded person. So, you're more apt to sit down and read a book, and more apt to watch the news. Even though you should be doing it anyway, you just feel more like you should. I think anyone who even made it to the state competition is a winner," she said.

Rhodes selects four people from each district — 32 in all— for the scholarships to Oxford University in England. K-State is in District Five. Winners in this district were from the University of Kansas, University of Iowa, Bryn Mawr College in Pennsylvania and Harvard University.

Pamela Dawn McElwee, a political science and environmental studies graduate of KU, was named a Rhodes Scholar. She now works in the Washington office of Vice President-elect Al Gore.

Baisinger and Sonnenfield are eligible to apply again for the Rhodes Scholarship next year if they want to.

"I could apply again next year, although I don't know if I will," Baisinger said. "The woman from KU who won — it was her second time to apply."

Sonnenfield also said she wasn't sure if she'd apply again.

United Way campaign falls short of expectations

ANN DOOCY

The United Way campaign deadline was extended through the end of last week because there was a lack of community support.

Ailleen Cray, executive director of Riley County United Way, said the campaign collected about $380,000, as opposed to last year's $432,000. The campaign ended Friday.

"With this holiday season, our volunteers have lost time to make contact with businesses. We really hate to have to cut back on programs when we don't need to," Cray said.

Suzy Auten, secretary for the K-State United Way coordinating committee, said as of now $82,000 has been collected from faculty and staff.

"We have received $10,700 from retirees and only about $63 from students," Auten said.

Auten said the goal for K-State was $100,000, but participation has been very low this year.

"Participation has only been at about 25. I think we have been partially hurt by the United

Leaders familiar in Topeka

Sheila Frahm of Colby 1st woman in major Senate post

TOPEKA — A veteran legislator with moderate views will be the next House speaker, and other familiar faces will fill leadership positions when the 1993 Legislature convenes Jan. 11.

A woman will hold a major post in the Senate for the first time.

House Republicans nominated Rep. Bob Miller of Wellington speaker for the next two years, making him perhaps the most powerful official in the Legislature because of the speaker's authority to make committee assignments and designate chairmen. In the Senate, a committee makes the assignments.

During 22 years in the House, Miller has been chairman of six committees and held two other leadership jobs.

GOP representatives also nominated Rep. Vince Snowbarger of Olathe to be majority leader, making him the first Johnson County legislator to hold the position in eight years. Democrats named Rep. Tom Sawyer of Wichita as minority leader-designate.

The nominations are tantamount to election, but must be confirmed by votes of the entire House when the 1993 session convenes.

In the Senate, President Bud Burke, R-Olathe, retained his post without opposition. Sen. Sheila Frahm, R-Colby, was the only candidate for majority leader, and will be the first woman to have that job.

Senate Democrats decided not to oust Minority Leader Jerry Karr of Emporia, even though the caucus'

▶BLAST TRAPS 8 COAL MINERS

NORTON, Va. (AP) — An explosion rocked an underground coal mine early Monday, trapping eight miners about a mile inside. One crawled to safety, authorities said.

Eighteen rescue squad units converged on the mine near the Guest River. It is located five miles outside Norton, a city of about 4,000 people in the southwestern corner of Virginia.

There was no word on the cause of the blast.

Explosions in coal mines can be caused by ignition of airborne coal dust or methane, a naturally occurring gas in coal seams.

▶CONVICTIONS NOT TO BE REINSTATED

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Supreme Court refused to reinstate former national security adviser John Poindexter's Iran-Contra convictions Monday.

A special prosecutor said he would seek to dismiss the case.

The justices let stand an appeals court ruling that reversed Poindexter's criminal convictions on the ground that his immunized testimony to Congress was used against him improperly.

Meanwhile, former Secretary of Defense Caspar Weinberger lost his bid to be tried by a judge rather than a jury on separate Iran-Contra charges.

Exhibit educates about exotic pets

■ "Cargo to Extinction," an exhibit of products from endangered wildlife, will be on display from 8 a.m. to 10 p.m. daily through Feb. 15 in the Holiday Inn Foyer.

ANN DOOCY

Manhattan is the smallest community to host World Wildlife Fund's "Cargo to Extinction" exhibit, after 2 1/2 years on a waiting list.

The exhibit, now on display at the Manhattan Holiday Inn, was previously at the National Geographic Society in Washington, D.C., said Angela Baier, Sunset Zoo marketing and development officer.

"The exhibit is a display of rare animal products from endangered and threatened species," Baier said. "The idea of the display is to educate the general public on illegal wildlife trade.

"The people involved in this kind of activity are usually also involved in illegal drug trade."

Schanee' Johnson, Sunset Zoo curator of education, said classes will be taught in February on the "Cargo to Extinction" exhibit for people of all ages.

"Consumers are the problem when it comes to illegal trade. We have to stop the need," Johnson said. "Educating people on exotic pets before buying is the key."

Johnson said the exhibit has been favorably received.

"People have been very impressed. It really makes you think of your everyday actions. It's very solemn," Johnson said.

Baier said the Holiday Inn was chosen to make the exhibit more accessible.

"We wanted some place that was free to the public, because some people can't afford to go to the zoo," Baier said. "The Holiday Inn is easily accessible, and we wanted to reach as many people as possible. It's a warm climate, and we can also reach out-of-towners who are traveling through Manhattan."

Video business is a family tradition

J. MATTHEW RHEA/Collegian

Brothers Kris Strutt (left), Charlie Sander, Brian Sander and Clint Strutt gather in the family Prime Time Video store owned by Kris, Brian and Clint. They lease tapes from their parents, who have owned a Prime Time store in Stockton for 10 years.

"Our parents taught us business ethics that we use in running our store."

Brothers open store in Aggieville

JENNIFER SHANK
Collegian

A new video store in Aggieville is a family affair.

Prime Time Video opened last month, owned by three brothers, Clint and Kris Strutt and Brian Sander.

The brothers got the idea from their parents, who have owned a Prime Time store in Stockton for 10 years. They knew the business because they had worked for their parents.

That experience helped get their store off the ground, said Clint, junior in psychology.

Clint, 21, paid for half the store, and Kris, 24, and Brian, 22, got a loan from the bank to pay the other half.

"We all see each other as equal partners, though," Kris said.

Having connections has its advantages, Kris said. The brothers lease their videos from their parents' store and will own them someday.

This way, they do not have to pay property tax, and the videos are tax deductible.

"Since we don't have to borrow more money, we will be able to pay off our loan quicker," Kris said.

Clint said business is picking up fast because of advertising, better selection, larger inventory and lower prices than other video stores.

"Our inventory can triple at any time because we get stock cheap from our parents," he said.

"We are also big on request items and will buy a video if we don't have it in stock."

The brothers are the only employees at Prime Time. They're looking to hire two or three people in January, because Kris and Brian plan on taking some classes, Clint said.

Prime Time will soon stock the largest selection of games in town, including Sega Genesis, Nintendo and Super Nintendo. The store will also carry video laser discs, which provide a higher quality picture and sound, Kris said.

Clint said they run the store to cater to the needs of their customers.

"Our parents taught us business ethics that we use in running our store," he said. "We will stay open on the holidays if that is what our clientele wants."

Fone provides a helpful ear

KRISTI STEPHENSON
Collegian

Help is literally a phone call away.

The Fone Crisis Center is a volunteer organization that runs a crisis hotline with about 30 volunteers trained to deal with any sort of problem.

"We talk to people about anything," center coordinator E.H. said, who said it is important that both the client and volunteer remain anonymous.

She said the center's busiest times are on weekends and during finals and holidays.

"We wanted to get the word out that we are very non-judgmental and empathetic and will listen to whoever calls," E.H. said. "We have very good volunteers that are very caring," she said.

The volunteers are usually students, and many are psychology majors who consider it a test to see if they have the right stuff. Volunteers are trained at the beginning of the semester. During a weekend training period, they get to practice phone procedures, listening skills and learn the importance of listening, not judging.

Volunteers don't tell people what to do, she said.

"It is a place for people to turn when they need someone who is objective or just someone to talk to," center volunteer M.L. said.

"More people should take advantage of it," said D.S., another center volunteer.

Students get crazy to relieve stress

SCOTT OBERKROM
Collegian

Finals are stressful for many students, and some find unique ways of relieving that stress.

"I vent," said Michelle Bishop, freshman in nutrition and exercise science. "Communication. I talk with others."

Some students have no particular method.

"I will do anything," said Debo Adejunmobi, senior in accounting. "I like to kick back and watch TV or play Sega Genesis. I also eat a lot of junk, like candy bars."

Many students mentioned exercise as a stress reliever.

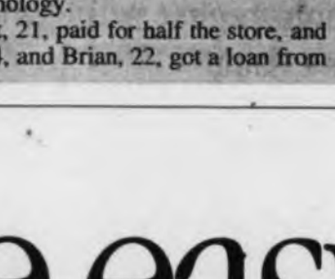
John Rees, senior in architecture, has a different mode of getting physical.

"I hit my door," Rees said. "I put my fist right through it. It helped a lot."

But, not all modes of relaxation involve property damage.

"I smoke my pipe," said Mike McRee, junior in psychology. "It allows me to relax.

"We used to streak, but we can't anymore," he said. "Now we have competition four-square for an hour at night. It gets pretty crazy."



Scott Tucker, senior in life sciences, said he is a veteran.

"I lift weights and watch TV," Tucker said. "I also drink and pull practical jokes."

Tucker scares his roommates.

"I hide in the closet while they are in the shower," he said. "They think I'm at class, and when they come, I jump out and scare them."

K-State needs no mace in eye

THE ISSUE

A flier in circulation is offering $2,000 for a design of a new mace to be carried during graduation ceremonies.

WE SUGGEST

In times of heavy budget-crunching such as these, a contest of this nature is completely unecessary.

The University has once again found a silly way to spend money it could be spending elsewhere.

"The Commencement Committee is working on ways to enhance the dignity and ceremony of our graduation exercises. It has established a Subcommittee on Ceremonies to consider various proposals for this purpose," a flier the administration distributed to faculty, students and staff said.

The idea is to design a mace to be carried at the head of the commencement procession to symbolize the "corporate nature of this important University event," the flier says.

The Commencement Committee is having competition to design a mace "that is formal, impressive and emblematic of the entire University."

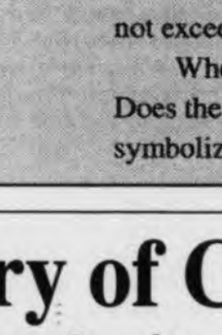
It estimates the cost of production should not exceed more than $2,000.

Where is this money going to come from? Does the University really need a mace to symbolize its importance? Have hoards of people been complaining commencement isn't impressive enough?

The University is struggling with its budget. There are closed sections, unfilled positions and heavy workloads.

This University doesn't have $2,000 to spend on ornaments for graduation ceremonies. There is already the proposal to make seniors pay a graduation fee to go through the commencement ceremonies, because they cost so much.

If graduation is so expensive now that they want students to pay for it, when other student needs go unanswered, why would anyone even think of proposing to spend $2,000 on a mace? Not only will this money be wasted, but time will be wasted on this idea.



The University should rely on its academic and professional accomplishments, its number of Rhodes and Truman scholars and the quality of its graduates to symbolize the "corporate nature of this important University event."

Not an unnecessary wasteful icon.

Story of Christmas reveals its true, spiritual history

'Tis the season to be jolly. To many Americans, this means to be fat, drunk and broke. In other words, needless suffering through reckless excesses of food, grog and spending.

That's not what Christmas means to me. At the very least, I try to overcome my capitalist-bred tendencies to indulge in the market's glitz. Brainwashing techniques and the deluge of commercial propaganda screaming "buy, buy, buy," can leave one with the feeling that to have a successful holiday with family, one must bestow expensive and frivolous gifts upon loved ones.

SCOTT SPRADLIN

All the shopping madness and travel plans can take away from the fact that this holiday is also a holy day.

Most any way you look at the origins of Christmas, you will find religious roots. For ancient Scandinavians, Christmas was a time to honor the winter solstice by burning large bonfires. Later, this custom was adapted by the English in the practice of burning yule logs.

It is widely believed that Martin Luther was the first to introduce the Christmas tree we know today. Martin Luther was said to have been outdoors one evening admiring the evergreens of a forest. The stars of the night sky danced brilliantly behind the trees setting a spectacular backdrop. So impressed was this German theologian, he brought an evergreen into his home and decorated it with candles to recreate the delightful scene.

Other sources have it that the Christmas tree is a result of Druid beliefs that evergreens have a divine nature, in that they flourish year round. Druids, a group of sorceress nature worshipers, would bring these divine evergreens into their homes and decorate them with bulbs and trinkets honoring the moon, stars and sun. Also, the gifts at the foot of the tree were put there as gifts for the tree or the divinity inhabiting the tree. Whatever the case, the Christmas tree is most likely Germanic in origin.

Santa Claus is a mythical character, derived from the factual St. Nicholas of Myra. This real-life man was a fourth century bishop in Asia-Minor noted for his charity. It was after this St. Nick that many began to model his practice of gift giving.

The jolly red giant as we know him today didn't even exist until American cartoonist Thomas Nast, in 1863, depicted him as a friendly fat guy in fur-trimmed red pajamas.

As I said, however, you look at the beginnings of Christmas and you will find religious roots. Even the word Christmas derives from the Old English Cristes maesse, a time when Christians celebrate the anniversary of the birth of Jesus.

Now we have stepped closer to what Christmas means to me.

What Christmas means to me is a time of worshiping the risen savior, Jesus, rather than food, drink or presents from the mall.

Christmas is a time to think about the Christ, Jesus, entering our world through the womb of the virgin Mary. This Christmas, I will think of how this meek babe of a humble birth grew into the man of sorrows brutally and painfully crucified under Pontious Pilate.

I will lament the necessity of his death but celebrate as I think about the new life offered to me, and all other takers, through his resurrection. Christmas means remembering that it was God who gave to all of humanity the finest gift, eternal life, by giving his Son to the throes of death.

A gift is only so if accepted by its recipient. If rejected, a gift looses its meaning, and the giver's intention is thwarted. This Christmas, think about this gift. It's there for you, but only if you'll have it.

Merry Christmas to all. And happy birthday, Jesus.

OTHER VIEWPOINTS

For those who like to keep tabs on nightmares from the bungling U.S. bureaucracy, here's a beaut: Remember Terry Anderson? The man kept hostage by terrorists?

Well, Anderson is writing a book about his experiences. He needed a little background about his captors, so he wrote the U.S. government to send him what they had.

Simple enough, eh?

Not quite.

Eight different federal agencies have now denied Anderson access to information about those who held him captive.

Why?

They said he will have to obtain the written consent of his captors before that information can be released.

Otherwise, said the U.S. Department of Justice, it would jeopardize their privacy rights.

However, the Justice Department did tell Anderson how he might obtain the information he needed.

He must obtain notarized personal privacy waivers from each of the terrorists, including their full names and present addresses.

Said a befuddled Anderson: "I just find it kind of strange that they would want to protect the privacy of members of the Hezbollah."

He also said he would be happy to comply, but "they are awfully hard to locate to get them to sign the form."

That's our government in action!

The Clarion-Ledger, Jackson, Miss.

Speechlessness and fury reign after the latest Neo-Nazi terror. But do the German authorities realize this is their last chance to act?

For too long, nothing has been done. For too long, rightist violence has been played down. For too long, all we've had are sympathetic words.

Rightist violence must be fought mercilessly by banning all Neo-nazi groups guilty of committing violence.

Just as important, the major political parties must end their hysterical debate over stemming the flood of immigrants.

Speech class turns project into reality

Editor,

Are you apprehensive about using campus facilities when you are alone at night?

As a group of concerned students, we have been given the task of investigating personal security on the K-State campus in the evening hours.

After much research, we have developed a concept of creating a campus safety week at the beginning of each semester to help faculty, staff and students become aware of the hazards of being alone on campus at night.

Some of our ideas include having self-defense demonstrations in the K-State Union, enhancing security opportunities and encouraging professors and instructors to take a few minutes to promote escort services and group travel.

In the beginning, we were working toward a grade. Now, we seek to become involved and make our campus a safe place.

▶ FACULTY/ADMIN.

Campus replete with people helping others

Editor,

As the end of the semester approaches, I am reminded of a segment of our University community that I appreciate on a daily basis and rarely take the opportunity to thank. This group is the K-State faculty, and I am most especially appreciative of the role they play in assisting students in times of personal emergencies and crises.

In my role as associate dean of student life, I believe I am in a unique position to observe the genuinely extraordinary role that faculty play in the academic career of the 400-500 students who each semester face a severe illness or personal crisis that impacts on their ability to succeed. Each semester there are numerous examples of faculty members' efforts that are beyond anyone's definition of their job responsibilities. Let me share with you examples from this fall semester.

A professor gave his lecture to a student in the hospital three times a week so the student would be able to complete the course. This professor is also a department head.

A professor drove to the Kansas City airport to pick up the father of a critically ill student and was host to the father in his home while the student recuperated.

I realize many in the University community may be tired of hearing one more administrator extol the virtues of K-State. However, I believe this is a contribution of faculty members that goes virtually unknown and certainly unacknowledged. I do understand that the life of a faculty member has many demands and priorities, and the extra effort it takes to assist a student in times of crisis is really far beyond anything we have a right to respect.

But please know what a difference this makes in students' academic careers. Many times I have seen a student on the point of withdrawing and not being able to persist when the right help came from a faculty member. Please do know that on behalf of my colleagues, Pat Bosco, Bernard Franklin, but most especially on behalf of K-State students, your gracious and caring support of students is very much appreciated.

Susan Scott

▶ EARTH SUMMIT

World involvement needed for pledge

Editor,

Last summer at the Earth Summit in Rio de Janeiro, an Earth Pledge campaign was initiated at the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development. The intention was to have everyone in the world sign a statement that declared "I pledge to make the Earth a secure and hospitable home for present and future generations." Almost everyone attending the Earth summit signed the pledge, including President Bush.

I would like to know where the pledge is now. I'm anxious to see everyone sign. If it was only a feel-good statement for the Earth Summit, then let's get a sign-up list going. I think it's exactly what we need. Amid so much difference between the viewpoints of people, I believe this statement could be invaluable as a tool for giving us some common ground.

To a certain extent, I believe it will unite people in all areas of business, government and society. It will put us all on one big team, reaching for a common goal, ready to bring nature up off its knees and thereby improving our quality of life.

I believe our environmental problems will subside much quicker once we all honestly make the pledge. Of course, as an American I realize this adds a little responsibility to our life, liberty and pursuit of happiness. But won't it be great to be a part of the team?

Don't wait for the bandwagon. Take initiative by participating now if you aren't already. Really consider the depth of the Earth Pledge, and try to apply it in your everyday life.

▶ ETHNIC DIVERSITY

Class needed to make others ethnic-savvy

Editor,

I would like to express my concern about diversity awareness on campus. Many students are interested in having a diversity awareness class. Last school year, a proposal for this type of class did not go through.

More and more people need a better understanding of other cultures. However, they are not able to learn about these cultures in a classroom setting. I feel this type of class is necessary due to fact that America's "melting pot" isn't melting. We should appreciate the different flavors we do have.

'SNL' star gives Bush and staff comic relief

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — The White House staff, from cooks to chieftains, assembled on short notice Monday for a special Christmas ceremony.

The Marine Band broke into "Ruffles and Flourishes" to signal the arrival of the president.

"Saturday Night Live" had come to the White House.

For 10 minutes, the president and his staff roared with laughter as the comic from late-night television performed his full impression of manic Bush jokes and gestures, with a little Ross Perot to boot.

It was a welcome break in a mansion whose occupants have not had much to laugh about since Election Day.

"This is very, very strange," said Carvey, who noted that he spent the night in the Lincoln Bedroom.

"I couldn't resist getting on the phone, and I called up the Secret Service as the president: 'Feel like going jogging tonight. In the nude,'" he quipped.

Carvey demonstrated how he melds John Wayne's and Mr. Rogers' voices to achieve his Bush.

"The president uses a lot of different gestures. ... Of course, I completely exaggerated it," he confessed.

But, he said, "In all fairness, on 'Saturday Night Live,' we do everyone.

"Every guy I do an impression of is sort of leaving public life," said Carvey, lapsing into a snippet of Johnny Carson.

Barbara Bush got up, wished the crowd a merry Christmas and deadpanned, "Wasn't he lucky I didn't hit him right on the head?"

And when Bush finally got a chance at the microphone, the president joked self-consciously, "Don't dare move my hands."

"Dana's given me a lot of laughs," Bush said.

"The fact that we can laugh at each other is a very fundamental thing. I'm not sure on Nov. 4 the invitation would have gone out and had the same enthusiasm," the president said.

MUSIC

Clinic an honor for young musicians

Fun is the key for Gold Orchestra

STEPHEN MCKEE
Collegian

The Gold Orchestra, Manhattan's all-youth string orchestra, has made it to the top.

"If you take your orchestra to the Midwest International Band and Orchestra Clinic, then you've made it to the top," said David Littrell, conductor of the orchestra and associate professor of music.

The Gold Orchestra, with 42 members ranging in age from 7-14 years, will play Thursday at All Faiths Chapel.

The All Faiths performance will be a send-off concert before the group heads to Chicago to take part in the Midwest International Band and Orchestra Clinic, Littrell said.

He said the concert will include the same pieces the orchestra is to perform in Chicago. The program will include music by Handel, Smetana, Lowden, Bach, Haydn, Vivaldi, Stephen, and K-State composer Hanley Jackson.

The third movement of Bach's "Violin Concerto in A minor" will feature Segen Smith, violin soloist and Gold Orchestra concertmaster. Jacques Wood and Andrew Bradford will be the student cello soloists for the allegro movement of Vivaldi's "Concerto in G minor" for two cellos.

Smith said the group is excited about going to Chicago.

"It will be a really great reward for all the hard work we put in," she said.

But, she said, there is a certain amount of pressure in being a part of the Gold Orchestra.

"Because we are all young, we have to wake up the audience and say, 'Hey, we can really play.' But the key to it all is have fun," Smith said.

The Gold Orchestra began five years ago when Littrell and violin teacher Jean Krause sent notices to the public schools' music faculty inviting elementary school string players to participate in Gold and Silver Orchestras.

The Silver Orchestra was designed as a pre-orchestral training group for students to learn orchestral routines, as well as music reading skills. The Gold Orchestra offered orchestral practice and performing for more advanced players.

Although the Silver Orchestra did not develop, 10 children in grades 3-6 responded to the notice, and the Gold Orchestra was created. By 1991, the membership of the orchestra had increased to 41.

The group then set out on a rigorous program of rehearsals, which included a weekend retreat at Rock Springs 4-H Ranch. The goal of this accelerated program was to garner an invitation to perform at the 1992 Midwest Band and Orchestra Clinic, Littrell said.

The orchestra is one of five groups that will perform at the clinic, Littrell said.

"The selection to perform is a great honor," he said. "Anyone who sends in a tape has to be pretty good.

"This endeavor started out as a training group," Littrell said. "Hopefully, they will get a sense of self worth, pride and accomplishment in what they have achieved."

SUPREME COURT

Decision angers pro-choice voice

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — The Supreme Court rejected a challenge to a Mississippi abortion law Monday, encouraging abortion foes but angering abortion-rights advocates.

The state law requires women to get counseling and then wait 24 hours before ending their pregnancies.

Without comment, the justices left intact a ruling that denied abortion clinic operators a hearing when they tried to block the law before it took effect last August.

The issue was how soon after such a law's enactment women may sue, claiming it is an undue burden on their constitutional right.

Monday's action is not a decision on the merits of the Mississippi dispute and sets no national precedent. But it represents a setback for abortion-rights advocates.

"It's hard to believe the Supreme Court would be so heartless or blind to the injustice of allowing women in Mississippi to be used as human guinea pigs — to force them to bear the undue burdens of these restrictions and then require them to come back for relief," Planned Parenthood lawyer Carole Chervin said.

But Burke Balch of the National Right to Life Committee said it is now clear the court does not believe in "endless litigation over whether women have the right to know the facts about the development of the unborn child and about alternatives to abortion."

A federal appeals court threw out a challenge to the Mississippi state law last August.

It noted the Supreme Court had upheld in June a Pennsylvania law that imposes similar counseling requirements and an identical waiting period.

In that landmark decision last June, the justices said states may not outlaw most abortions or impose undue burdens on women's constitutional right to such operations.

"It is pretty time consuming," Sonnenfield said. "It's always a viable option, though. I haven't even considered it yet. You'd have to ask me again next year. Right now, I just want to get through the semester."

Baisinger said a year or so after graduation she will attend law school, and Sonnenfield said she has three more years in veterinary medicine.

Sonnenfield said Nancy Twiss, academic adviser and special assistant to the provost for scholarships, deserves a lot of the recognition.

She helped them organize mock interviews, answered questions, helped critique essays, and arranged plane fare for them, Sonnenfield said.

"She's been a real inspiration to me, and I know Jill too," Sonnenfield said.

"She kept us up during the hard times. She gives 110 percent. She's one of the reasons K-State ranks where they do. I guarantee she'll deny all of it, but she is."

Rhodes scholarships were established at the turn of the century by the estate of Cecil Rhodes, a British philanthropist and colonialist.

Qualities considered in the selection process include academic excellence, integrity, leadership ability and athletic prowess.

Aid groups say half the food donated for starving Somalis has been stolen by the gangs of gunmen who have held sway during a nearly 2-year-old civil war.

An estimated 300,000 Somalis have died from starvation, disease and fighting this year, and 250,000 may be in imminent danger.

Rival militiamen battled for a second day in Baidoa, one of the inland towns hit hardest by famine. A spokesman for the international relief agency CARE, Rick Grant, said at least 48 people were killed and 50 wounded Monday.

Grant said at least 28 and possibly 34 died in fighting Sunday between feuding clansmen.

U.S. troops and smaller contingents from France, Canada, Egypt, Kuwait and other nations hope to impose calm so that supplies can move safely into the countryside.

American officials have said U.S. troops will fight if necessary. But Marlin Fitzwater, White House spokesman, said Monday the initial response from Somali warlords had been better than expected. "Many of the problems we had feared most have not materialized," he said.

Kenya announced Monday that it closed its border with Somalia to prevent armed Somalis from seeking refuge. Ethiopia took the same step over the weekend.

The two nations abut nearly all of Somalia's land frontier.

U.S. officers in the Navy's amphibious task force said the first mission of the Marines off the coast would be taking control of the seaport and airport at Mogadishu.

The Marines — who arrived in the area last week — will come ashore in helicopters and amphibious vehicles. First, they will secure the airport in Baidoa to pave the way for the Army's 10th Mountain Division.

Two Navy F-14s flew over Mogadishu, dropping orange flares to defend against any attack by militiamen armed with shoulder-mounted missiles. Pentagon sources said F-14s from the aircraft carrier USS Ranger flew reconnaissance missions over Somalia scouting for the Marine landing.

Way national scandal at the beginning of the year," Auten said.

Cray said she hopes people will send in donations, where maybe before they said no.

"We don't care how we get it, just as long as we get it," Cray said.

Auten said, "Education is the key to get people to change their attitudes about the United Way, understanding what it's about."

Auten said 99 percent of the money taken in through the local United Way stays in Manhattan, but people don't realize that.

"People in Manhattan don't like to think that there are disadvantaged families here, but we do have them, and they do need help," Auten said.

K-State's hockey team finished its preseason schedule in Dallas, playing two games last Saturday at a tournament hosted by Southern Methodist University.

The Wildcats lost to SMU 4-2, before taking the ice again to beat Memphis, 7-3.

In the loss, K-State essentially defeated itself, receiving 28 penalty minutes. SMU used the power-play situations successfully.

"I was always in the penalty box," defensive player Jake Kisel said about sitting 12 of the 60 minutes in the cool box. "They scored all their goals when we were short-handed."

Right wing offensive player Pat Steiner said the penalties "didn't really help the team."

Besides the amount of penalties, SMU's goalie was another problem for the Cats. K-State's offensive lines just couldn't shoot the puck into the net.

"Our offense was really pretty good," Steiner said. "Their goalie made really good saves. He saved about 50 shots."

In front of their own goal, the Cats had the situation under control, Steiner said. But SMU converted several rebounds coming off the goalie successfully.

"Our defense was great," Steiner said. "All their goals came off rebounds. You can't control it. They just got a few more breaks on rebounds."

Scott Thorne scored the two goals for the Cats.

After 30 minutes cooling off after the loss, K-State returned to the ice against Memphis with a different attitude.

"We talked and I yelled at everyone to get pumped up," Steiner said. "We skated a lot better, we checked better, and hitting was more a part in the second game."

K-State's goalie had a good game, Kisel said, and the offense finally found a way to get the puck into the net.

Thorne was twice successful, and center Yui Namba, in his last game for the Cats before returning to Japan, had a hat trick, lifting the score from 2-0 to 5-0 within five minutes of the second period.

Steiner and Mike Bachtle were the other two scorers to beat Memphis, the first win in six games for K-State's skaters.

"We were always in the lead, and it was not much of a contest, but it was a good game," Kisel said. "We always had the first line on the ice in power-play situations and we converted a couple of those. That helped."

The final game on Sunday between K-State and SMU was canceled because SMU did not have enough players to send on the ice.

The record of 1-5 doesn't look impressive, but Kisel and Steiner agreed that the team is on its way up.

"I think we kinda got things figured out in the preseason games," Kisel said.

When the Cats open their regular Division II season against Kansas, they have to be more united. The opener is scheduled for Jan. 16 at the Kansas Coliseum in Wichita.

"It's hard to have everyone to show up at all games, playing all the games late on weekends not closer than in Kansas City," Steiner said. "If everyone of our 15 players is there, we will not lose too many games."

MONDAY NIGHT FOOTBALL

Turnovers lead to Oilers' 24-7 victory over Chicago

ASSOCIATED PRESS

HOUSTON — The Houston Oilers found the Chicago Bears in another giving mood on Monday night.

The Oilers, capitalizing on two of three Chicago turnovers, beat the Bears 24-7. They were ignited by a 26-yard interception return for a touchdown by Bubba McDowell and Webster Slaughter's 6-yard touchdown catch, set up by Ray Childress' fumble recovery.

The Oilers (8-5) remained in the running for an AFC wild-card playoff berth, and the Bears (4-9), continuing to wilt under their own miscues, lost their sixth straight game.

"This game was no different, we had to win last week, and we had to win this week," Oilers quarterback Cody Carlson said. "Now we have to win next week."

Houston did no more than copy what other teams have done to Chicago this season. The Bears have lost 26 turnovers, and the opposition has produced 17 touchdowns and two fields goals from the errors.

Houston's defense also had five quarterback sacks.

McDowell turned a sleepy defensive struggle into a 10-0 halftime Oiler lead with his theft, and Brad Muster's third-quarter fumble was recovered by Childress, setting in motion the same scenario.

"We were looking for a spark, and it felt good," McDowell said. "I was very close to going out of bounds. When I caught it, I was going toward out of bounds.

"It was very close."

Houston's Lorenzo White kept the game from being close. He gained 116 yards on 20 carries and went over the 1,000-yard rushing mark.

"That was a beautiful interception by Bubba," White said. "It motivated us on offense to get out there and score some points and not let the defense do all the work."

"I don't know what else to say," Bears coach Mike Ditka said. "They didn't do anything in the first half. It was 3-0, and then we threw them a turnover. That's something we've learned to do very well."

After trading defensive punches through the first quarter, the Oilers finally took a 3-0 lead on a 19-yard field goal, despite the anxious demands of Oiler fans wanting a touchdown on fourth down from the Bears 2-yard line.

Carlson's third-down pass to Slaughter got the Oilers a 16-yard gain for a first down at the Chicago 29, and a 10-yard pass interference penalty against Lemuel Stinson put the ball on Chicago's 6-yard line.

But two incompletions and a 4-yard gain by White were all the Oilers could muster before Al Del Greco's kick.

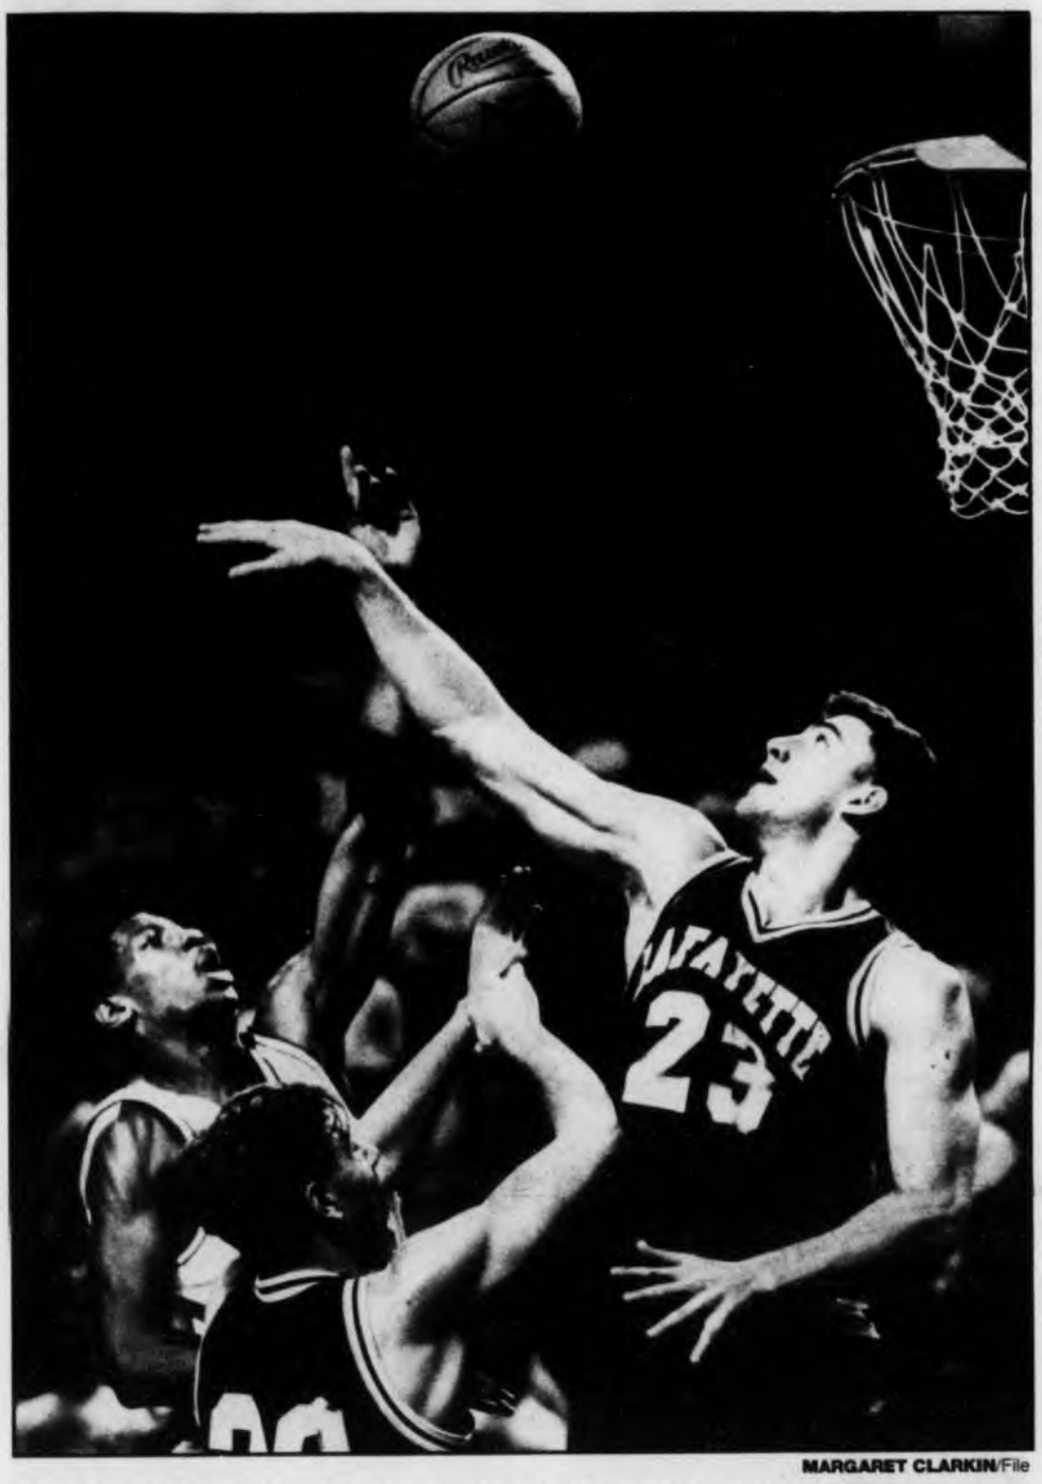
The game appeared headed for a 3-0 halftime when McDowell stepped in front of Peter Tom Willis' pass intended for Neal Anderson and ran down the sidelines 26 yards with 44 seconds left in the half. It was the first touchdown of McDowell's four-year career.

The Oilers thought they had an interception in the second quarter when cornerback Jerry Gray ran down an overthrown pass by Willis, but he was flagged for interfering with Anthony Morgan, nullifying the theft.

Despite a 17-0 lead, the Oilers fans booed Coach Jack Pardee's decision to have Del Greco attempt a 48-yard field goal with fourth down and one to go at the Chicago 30. Holder Greg Montgomery bobbled the snap for a 15-yard loss.

That ignited Chicago's only touchdown, a 17-yard pass from Willis to Anderson on the first play of the fourth quarter. A 20-yard pass interference penalty against cornerback Chris Dishman on a third-and-19 kept the drive alive.

"I don't think I played very bad," Willis said. "We tried to establish the running game, and we did that. We had good plays — they just didn't work."



The Oilers answered that with White's 1-yard touchdown run with 9:40 left in the game, putting the Bears away.

"For us to have a chance tonight, we needed William and Sean to have big games," Pardee said. "We're looking forward to the next three games. I'm looking forward to them."

Undefeated Cats to face 0-2 Ohio

The Wildcats face what may be one of their toughest non-conference home opponents this season when they play the Ohio Bobcats at 7:30 tonight in Bramlage Coliseum.

The Bobcats, though 0-2 this season, are not strangers to success.

Ohio has been to the NCAA tournament eight times, winning the championship once. The 1982-83 team, led by now-Nebraska coach Danny Nee, was 23-9 and advanced to the second round of the tourney.

This year's Ohio team is coached by Larry Hunter, who has a career record of 351-116, a .752 winning percentage. He is the winningest coach in the history of Wittenberg University, where he coached from 1976 to 1989, and he was named the NCAA Division III Coach of the Year in 1977.

But Hunter, now in his third season at Ohio, is leading a young Bobcat team that lost all five starters from last year's squad. Two freshmen and two sophomores will start for the Bobcats, and the top returner from last season's 18-10 team, junior forward Ryan Greenwood, averaged just 6.1 points a game.

This season's top scorer is 6-foot-7 freshman center Gary Trent, who is averaging 13 points and 11 rebounds a game.

"We're just very young and require patience," Hunter said.

The Cats, with convincing victories over Coppin State and Lafayette, are looking to go 3-0 for the second consecutive season.

The Wildcats have made 48 percent of their field goals this season, including 44 percent of their 3-pointers.

But K-State has struggled at times, and the inside game is still having trouble scoring points.

"Offensively, we're about where I thought we'd be," K-State coach Dana Altman said. "I didn't think we'd be very far along, and we're not."

At least five Wildcat players have managed to score in double figures in each of the first two contests. Senior guard Vincent Jackson leads the team with a per-game average of 14 points.

On the defensive end, the Wildcats are giving up just 62 points a game but have yet to play a school that came into the game with a victory.

"Defensively, I thought we'd be more solid than we are, and I thought we'd be a much better rebounding team than we are right now," Altman said. "We're not rebounding very well at all."

The Cats, who have out-rebounded their opponents 78-65, are led on the boards by junior forward Deryl Cunningham. He is averaging more than eight rebounds a game, including seven boards in 21 minutes against Lafayette.

Freshman center Jerrell Roberson — at 6-9, the tallest Cat — recorded six rebounds in just 15 minutes in K-State's 86-63 win. He pulled down five of those in eight minutes of first-half action.

"I try to fire the team up as much as I can," Roberson said. "I try to come off the bench and give the team a lift, and it seems like when I get fired up, the whole team gets fired up.

"I just want to do whatever it takes to win games. All I'm concerned with is getting a 'W' in the win column."

Tonight's contest will be the first meeting between the two schools.

SPORTS DIGEST

▶CARTER PICKS JAYS OVER ROYALS

LOUISVILLE, Ky. (AP) — Free agent Joe Carter chose his new home over his old one, agreeing Monday night to re-sign with the Toronto Blue Jays, the Associated Press has learned.

Carter, who helped take Toronto to the World Series, had decided it would be between the Blue Jays and the Kansas City Royals.

Carter, 32, is from the Kansas City area.

The three-year deal, plus an option year, was to be announced later Monday night at the winter meetings.

Carter hit 34 home runs with 119 RBIs and a .264 average last season. He has at least 100 RBIs in six of his last seven seasons.

▶HAWKS ROUT EMPORIA STATE, 91-56

LAWRENCE (AP) — Eric Pauley scored 14 points and keyed a second-half run as No. 2 Kansas, now 3-0, overcame a sluggish start to rout Emporia State 91-56 Monday night.

Emporia State (4-1), a first-year NCAA Division II school, trailed just 40-33 at halftime.

Five Kansas players reached double figures, including Rex Walters with 14 points, Adonis Jordan with 13, Greg Ostertag with 12 and Darrin Hancock with 10.

Kansas struggled from the outside in the first half, shooting only 4 of 15 from 3-point range.

▶BASEBALL STRIKE NOW A REALITY

LOUISVILLE, Ky. (AP) — Baseball owners voted 15-13 Monday to reopen their labor agreement, putting the 1993 season in jeopardy of the sport's eighth work stoppage in 22 years.

Owners also voted unanimously to require a 75-percent vote in order to lock out players in the future.

About an hour before the vote was announced, union head Donald Fehr said he hoped owners would not reopen the contract, which was agreed to on March 19, 1990, and had been set to expire in 1993.

"Baseball needs another controversy like it needs another bullet in the head," Fehr said.

Reader questions what is important in choosing mate

DEAR CASSANDRA,

A few weeks ago, we had to do an in-class paper for English. Our topic was "What is the most important characteristic in looking for a potential spouse?" I had a lot of problems coming up with an answer. There are many important things — love, honesty, trust, etc., but what is the most important characteristic? From reading your column the past couple of days, it seems that other people find the "physical" things more important. What do you think?

A.D.

DEAR A.D.,

Each quality you mentioned (and many you did not) are important enough to be included as criteria for selecting a mate. Near the bottom of the list is probably physical appearance and/or sex.

Good looks and sexual satisfaction are the "icing" on the cake, so to speak, but they are not the materials you want to use for building the foundation of a lasting relationship.

You asked for only one, though, so here it is, the most often cited reason for divorce: incompatibility. So, I think the most important characteristic of a lifelong companion is compatibility — one who can tolerate you and all your idiosyncrasies; one who is in harmony with most of your choices in lifestyle, religion, politics and career; and one who has a map for the future very similar to yours.

Many think love is the most important in a marriage, and I would agree it certainly rates near the top. But the road is littered with divorced couples who love each other, but simply cannot live with each other.

DEAR READERS,

My column on Nov. 9 ran a letter in which the writer referred to someone, for lack of a better appellation, as "Big Bob." A reader has brought to my attention that it is possible that some individuals may confuse this name with someone who actually goes by the nickname, "Big Bob." As far as I know, the nickname "Big Bob" is fictional and does not refer to anyone who actually uses such a name. So, all you gentlemen (maybe even a few ladies) who call yourself "Big Bob" can relax ... the column was not about you.

Legislature elects leaders

performance in this year's election was the worst in 24 years, losing five of 18 seats. Karr won his leadership race by only one vote.

After the voting, the most-asked question was whether unity would prevail after close leadership races.

"Hey, we've got our parking spaces (on the Statehouse grounds)," Snowbarger said.

"You bet."

The four caucuses filled 26 positions, and more than two-thirds of the jobs went to white men. Eight positions will be filled by women, but Sawyer, who is Hispanic, is the only nonwhite leader.

Most of the Republican leaders — including Miller and Burke — come from the moderate wing of the party. Both Miller and Burke have pro-choice voting records, for example.

The most significant contested race was for House speaker. Miller defeated Rep. Bob Mead, R-Pawnee, who described himself as more conservative fiscally and promised a more open leadership style.

In the House, the speaker has the power to set the debate calendar and make all committee assignments. Republicans will have 66 of the House's 125 seats when the 1993 Legislature convenes.

Thirty-eight voted for Miller to 28 for Mead.

Miller, a 48-year-old farmer, is considered a moderate, and Democrats have said they might be able to form coalitions with some GOP representatives to get progressive legislation passed.

Miller also is a known quantity. He served as majority leader in 1989 and 1990, then was elected minority leader after Republicans lost control of the House in the 1990 elections. Some Republicans gave his office credit for engineering the GOP's return to power this year.

Like packing a suitcase.

With outpatient surgery you may throw all thought of folded PJs and sample-sized toothpaste to the wind. You see, thanks to outpatient surgery, many patients may now check in for surgery in the morning and check out for home in the afternoon.

With no worries about the bills, the bother or the boredom of an extended hospital stay. But with all the security of our responsive and ready hospital surroundings.

So check with your physician about outpatient surgery. And see if you can't pack your suitcase . . . back into the closet.

Solutions from your Apple Campus Reseller:
The Apple Computer Loan.

"Why should I wait in line at the computer lab when I can own a Macintosh for $15 a month?"

Kevin Campbell
Aerospace Engineering Major

What allowed Kevin to own an Apple® Macintosh® PowerBook™ 145 computer for such a low monthly payment? The Apple Computer Loan.* Kevin knew that owning the power and portability of a Macintosh PowerBook for his full course load and his work in the Civil Air Patrol was a smart thing to do. And the Apple Computer Loan was the smart way to do it: easy application, fast turnaround and low, flexible payment terms. So Kevin went to the only place that offers the Apple Computer Loan, his Apple Campus Reseller.

Macintosh. It's more than a present, it's a future.

Ogden teacher makes lasting impression

CRAIG HACKER/Collegian

Ivory Anderson, sixth-grade teacher at Ogden Elementary School, discusses a social studies lesson with his class Tuesday morning. Anderson, who has been teaching in the Manhattan area for 23 years, stresses discipline in his classroom.

"As I've told you before, if you have two ears and one mouth, you should be doing less talking and more listening."

Ivory Anderson was a little concerned when the photographer didn't show up. He said he wanted recognition for his students.

"They've given me 100 percent," he said, "and the success of most teachers is the kid."

Anderson went on, quietly explaining how he's spent the past two years with the same class to prepare the students for middle school in Manhattan. Then he heard the commotion in the front row.

"Excuse me," he said and walked toward the student. The noise subsided, but not completely, as Anderson stood over the student's desk.

He spoke louder: "As I've told you before, if you have two ears and one mouth, you should be doing less talking and more listening."

The student looked down. Below his desk, he wrung his hands.

Anderson, a sixth-grade teacher and principal's aide at Ogden Elementary School, has made a lasting impression. After teaching in the Manhattan area for 23 years, he's made many. Above all, he's taught his kids discipline.

"Kids this age want to try you," he said. "They want to do just enough to get by. These kids have something to do for me each night."

Anderson said he stresses structure, discipline and organization to his students. And judging by the responses he gets from former students, the lessons seem to have worked.

He said former students — lawyers and accountants among them — still correspond with him and offer him their services.

"Like my attorney in Kansas City," Anderson said. "He said, 'You helped me make it.' That's a good feeling."

Other students, Anderson said, have wanted him to meet their grandparents. Still more have added to the collection of 200 coffee mugs he's received.

"I've got one child, but these are my children," he said. "I see them more times a day than their parents do. I've got a special bond with them."

Most of Anderson's students come from military families, and often they have divorced parents. It's a group that needs to learn more listening skills, he said.

More commotion. This time it came from the back row. Anderson got up from his chair.

"It kills me to see students waste time," he said, his voice rising. "If I have to come over there to you three, I'll be on you like hair on a dog's back."

The noise subsided.

Ogden principal Doyle Barns said Anderson is fulfilling a role that is more frequently demanded of teachers.

"Children today are having a great many needs helped at the institutional level," Barns said. "I think generally kids are without a

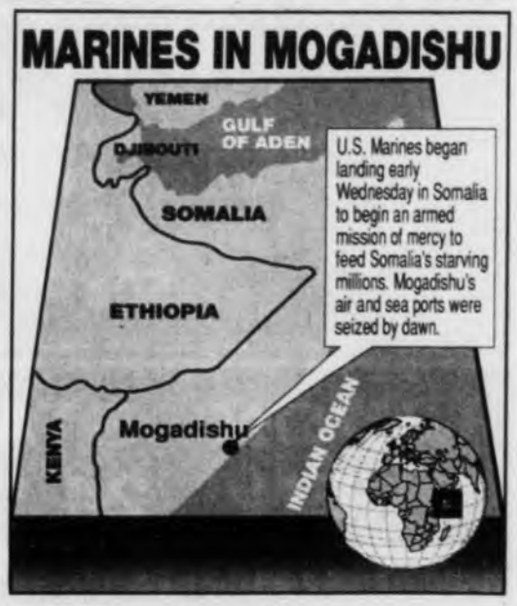
Troops seize Somalian capital

ASSOCIATED PRESS

MOGADISHU, Somalia — Mobbed by the media but meeting no resistance, American troops landed by the glow of the moon and TV lights shortly after midnight local time Wednesday to extend heavily armed helping hands to Somalia's starving millions.

Troops moved swiftly to seize the capital's air and sea ports.

Amphibious vehicles came out of the Indian Ocean, rolled over the dunes and to the airport.



Meanwhile, a company of Marines in rubber rafts slipped into the port about a mile away, AP correspondent Jeffrey Ulbrich reported from aboard the USS Tripoli.

The Marines were taking control of the airport and harbor in the first step of a plan to seize vital gateways for international aid and get food, medicine and other supplies.

More than 300,000 Somalis already have died in one of history's most savage famines, and the United Nations says 2 million more are at risk of starvation. The aid operation has been disrupted by civil war and looting.

The first reconnaissance team of 20 Navy frogmen and Marines came out of the sea four

What about the long term?

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — U.S. forces are entering Somalia to stabilize a country with no government, devastated by starvation with armed bands blocking food deliveries.

Even if the mission succeeds, will the African nation slip back into anarchy when they leave?

In one sense, the U.S. mission is limited: Use a show of overwhelming force to enable relief workers to do their job without interference from the rival gangs. But left unclear are the answers to longer-term questions.

Will the U.S. forces inevitably have to take the guns away from the warlords and their followers? And would that change the nature of the U.S. mission and extend it well beyond what anyone now is contemplating?

With all the uncertainty, one prediction seems sure: While President Bush dispatched the U.S. troops, it will fall to President Clinton to decide when they come home.

At a news conference Tuesday at the Capitol, Clinton suggested he'd define the U.S. mission narrowly: establishing secure supply lines. But the president-elect sounded skeptical of talk that the U.S. forces could withdraw by mid-January.

Rep. Dave McCurdy, D-Okla., chairman of the House Intelligence Committee, said the United States ought to be planning the transfer of authority to a U.N. peacekeeping force.

"You have a trauma patient," McCurdy said of Somalia. "You stabilize him and then hand him over to the experts."

A positive sign: U.S. special envoy Robert Oakley said the price of guns had dropped sharply in Mogadishu.

"People feel they aren't going to use their weapons and are getting rid of them," he said.

The prospects for long-term stability seem uncertain at best.

"It's premature to think about national discussions," said David Smock, an Africa scholar at the U.S. Institute for Peace.

▶RUSSIAN DEBT HURTING U.S. FARMERS

WASHINGTON — (AP) Russia's difficulty repaying loans for U.S. grain presents more than accounting trouble for this nation's farmers.

When one of their best customers can't shop for corn or wheat, their profits shrink.

Two weeks ago, Russia began defaulting on loan payments guaranteed by the Agriculture Department and has run up $24.4 million in overdue debt.

Monday, the country added $3.7 million in overdue loans to the $20.6 million already in default, USDA spokesman Roger Runningen said Tuesday. USDA has suspended its line of credit to Russia until the payments are brought up to date.

That means Russia cannot tap $171 million in credit guarantees now available to cinch a pork sale or buy other U.S. farm products.

Administrators help family who lost house to fire

JANET SATTERLEE

During the Thanksgiving holiday, one K-State student counted her blessings as well as her losses.

On Nov. 17, Carlotte Moore, senior in social work, learned her parents' home in Kansas City, Kan., had been destroyed by fire due to arson.

Moore's mother, Frances Potts, also lost her business, which was attached to the home. Potts printed resumés and business cards, as well as newsletters for churches in the Kansas City area.

Moore said she felt the need to talk about the situation with Mordean Taylor-Archer, assistant provost for multicultural affairs, and Bernard Franklin, assistant dean of student life.

"When I went to talk to Mordean and Bernard Franklin about the situation, they were very helpful. I went to them just so I could talk, but they ended up helping me," Moore said. "Bernard Franklin even took me home that night."

Archer said after she talked to Moore, she informed all the University administrators.

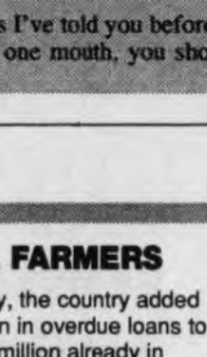
LEGISLATURE

Precision is key for newest Senate leader



DAN GRAFEL
Collegian

The Kansas Senate has its first female majority leader.

Sheila Frahm, R-Colby, represents the 40th District, which encompasses most of northwest Kansas. She was elected to majority leader Monday.

Frahm will be responsible for determining which bills will be debated in Senate and when they will be debated.

She will also coordinate that schedule with the House of Representatives.

Frahm

"I think she'll do an excellent job," Lana Oleen, R-Manhattan, said.

"She has the kind of temperament, reserve and strength that I think is necessary in that position."

Oleen said she thought the current leadership in the Senate represents a good balance between rural and urban interests in the state.

Frahm's district includes 15 primarily rural counties, while re-elected Senate President Bud Burke, R-Olathe, represents Johnson County, the Kansas City area.

Frahm said her leadership style would be organized and precise, and she would be conscientious of the desires of the entire Republican caucus.

"Due to the lack of a clear agenda by the governor, I will be working with the Republican leadership to put together an agenda of our own," she said.

She said some of the important items on her agenda would include health care reform, worker's compensation, the expiration of tax lids on county government and the cost of community colleges.

Oleen said she agreed that the entire Republican caucus would be working hard to develop an agenda for next year.

"It's difficult at this time to know exactly what the governor's message will be, other than budget concerns," she said.

As majority leader, Frahm will automatically serve on the Organization, Calendar and Rules Committee, where she will work with Burke and five other senators to appoint committee chairs and assign committee responsibilities for the entire Senate.

Oleen said she has served with Frahm on several committees in the past and plans to in the future.

"She does her homework, and she's a straight shooter. That's what you want in a majority leader," Oleen said.

Students top pros in design contest

"The climate in Houston is incredibly hot, and we wanted a place where people could just relax near the water."

ERIC HORNIG
Senior in landscape architecture

LISA COLE
Collegian

Four K-State students topped 115 other professional competitors to win fourth place in the Heart of the Park Design Competition.

Jason Jones, senior in parks and recreation administration; Eric Hornig, senior in landscape architecture; Ami Ackerman, junior in park resource management; and Craig Rhodes, senior in landscape architecture, formed the only student team to place in the competition for Hermann Park in Houston. The students were awarded $2,500.

All other winners were from professional firms.

The project was a class assignment for Design of Park and Recreation Areas, said Stephanie Rolley, assistant professor of landscape architecture.

Five teams from the class turned in designs, and three of them were submitted.

Rolley said the guidelines of the contest were to create a design to enhance the existing park and make it "a place for people."

"The part we had to change was the center axis of a big park," Rhodes said.

The designs were limited to a $400-million budget, Rolley said.

Hornig said the core of the team's design was a reflecting pool with fluctuating water levels. During the day, the pool's fountains would only be two feet tall, allowing children to play in the water. The fountains would be 30 feet tall at night.

"The climate in Houston is incredibly hot, and we wanted a place where people could just relax near the water," Hornig said.

Ackerman said the fluctuating water levels of the fountains will also conserve water, because there are sometimes water shortages in Houston.

Rolley said the students' design for the reflecting pool was the main feature cited by the contest judges in their comments.

Hornig said the team worked on their design from late October to early November.

The contest was sponsored by the Rice Design Alliance, associated with Rice University.

Chauffeuring his dreams

Student opens limousine service for Manhattan area

JENNIFER SHANK
Collegian

A K-State student has something to chauffeur his education.

Brian Martinie, senior in geography, started a "round the clock" limousine service Nov. 30.

He said he felt there was a need for a limo service, and that it would be useful to K-State students, the community and Fort Riley.

"I bought a Lincoln Town Car stretch limo that came from New York City and has a TV, moonroof, divider, bar and a separate stereo in the back," he said.

Martinie said he will drive to the surrounding communities of Wamego and Marysville and go as far as Topeka and Kansas City. He said he would also like to drive for weddings, concerts and Landon Lectures.

He is in the business by himself and offers lower rates than some limo services in larger cities. His rate is $40 per hour, with a two-hour minimum. The prices reduce with the increase in hours.

He hopes use of the limo service will increase with the nearing holidays, he said.

"It was semi-slow during this past week, but I hope the weekends will bring in business as well as the Christmas season with all of the parties," he said.

Brian Pine, senior in agribusiness, and his date were escorted to a fraternity formal by

K-STATE AMBASSADORS

Johnson has new ideas

SCOTT OBERKROM
Collegian

The role of a K-State Ambassador is a difficult, but rewarding task — one that Todd Johnson, junior in agriculture business, said he is excited about.

Johnson said he contemplated running for ambassador last fall while serving on the student alumni board. He said it seemed a good opportunity to give something back to the University.

"I'm really looking forward to next semester," he said.

Ambassadors represent the student body at alumni events and to K-State visitors, assist in student recruitment and help educate new students about the University, he said.

"We're associated with the alumni, but we represent the students," he said. "We like to think that we represent the students' views and beliefs."

Johnson said he is looking forward to the diversity of the people he will meet.

"I think that it will be fun to visit with older alumni and hear about what K-State was like when they were here," he said. "And it will be fun to visit with potential students and see what they think about K-State."

One aspect he would like to expand upon is the role of the ambassadors on campus.

Johnson

"The main thing is to let college deans know we are here to help," Johnson said.

He said he would like to speak at freshman seminar courses and help educate the younger students about K-State.

Meeting with many different people requires quick thinking on the part of the ambassadors.

"You have to feel comfortable in any situation," he said. "You have to be able to change crowds easily and have a strong love for K-State."

Johnson said he was pleased with the new procedure for ambassador elections. After the final interview, candidates have one week to prepare for the election.

"You can't really campaign for the position," he said. "But we were able to talk to friends. It was nice not to having everything back to back."

And he is ready with ideas for future elections. He would like to see more coverage of the election, he said

"I would like to publicize the names and photos earlier," he said. "This way, students could ask questions of the candidates."

Announcing the candidates at the pep rally and the one-day coverage by the Collegian was not enough, he said.

"Only a limited number of students were able to attend the pep rally due to limited space and time of day," he said. "And if students don't come to campus the day the paper covers it (the election), they won't know who is running."

'Lifetime K-Stater' eager to begin job

LANE ALLISON
Collegian

Votes have been counted. Results are in.

Heather Riley, a self-described "lifetime K-Stater," has been chosen as a K-State ambassador and said she considers it an honor.

"There are very few things in my life that I'm as positive about as my decision to come to K-State.

"The opportunity to go out and represent K-State to people off the campus is really exciting to me because its something I feel very strongly about," she said.

And she is counting on it being a busy honor.

"We represent the student body at student recruitment events for high-school seniors and juniors and alumni events. I've been told we'll go to 60 to 75 alumni events throughout the year.

Riley

"We are also hosts to Landon Lecture patrons. We are generally on-call for the president's office whenever they need student representatives," she said.

Riley said the the most important of the many roles of the ambassadors is that of being a student liaison to the alumni.

"Perspective students get a lot of contact with admissions representatives and students when they come up for campus tours. But sometimes the only contact alumni have with

Helpful tips for finals stress

THE ISSUE

Finals are closing in, and major stress will soon be a way of life for most.

WE SUGGEST

Try a few of these tips and see that stress just melt away.

Procrastination. It's awfully fun, until the last two weeks of school roll around. Then, suddenly your grades, your life, hang in the balance.

Here's a slew of tips for the student who needs to relieve stress during this most trying time of the semester.

For those of you who have lots of tests, papers and projects due this pre-finals week, or for those who have actually started studying for finals, this comes just in time to prevent a total breakdown. For the rest of you, save it until next week. You're going to need it.

Had it up to here?

1) Strip down naked and sing show tunes in your living room.

2) Buy a Chia Pet at Wal-Mart and watch it grow.

3) Learn how to play the clarinet.

4) Clean out your belly button.

5) Hide your roommates notebook with the notes from all her classes, and watch her sweat for a few hours.

6) Bake Christmas cookies shaped like body parts.

8) Rent a foreign film with subtitles, turn down the volume on the television and act out the parts with your roommates.

9) Drive to Nebraska.

10) Wake your roommate up and tell her it's 10 a.m. when it's really 8 and say, "Didn't you say you had a final at 9:30."

11) Order a can of spray-on hair from late-night infomercial for a balding friend.

12) Shotgun a couple of cans of Jolt pop.

13) Go sledding on a big cookie sheet.

14) Pluck a bunch of nose hairs and mail them to friends.

15) Smoke as many cigarettes and drink as many cups of coffee as you can in a half an hour and see how you feel.

These are only a smattering of the hundreds of silly, irreverent, irresponsible things you can do to keep from loosing your mind while you try to make up for all the big ones that kept you from your studies during the other 15 weeks of the semester.

Good luck. And may the Force be with you.

Keep Hammer and Nail out of Somalia

Once again, the United States has demonstrated its ineptitude to act on a problem when it occurs.

KELLY KLAWONN

So there they are. Thousands upon thousands of starving Somalis. And there we go, sending thousands upon thousands of trained killers. When the only tool you have is a hammer, everything tends to look like a nail.

On Friday afternoon, President Bush announced that the United Nations had accepted the United States' offer to deploy troops into the battle-ridden African country of Somalia. Hammer.

The mission, called Operation Restore Hope, is intended to help aid in the delivery of food and medical supplies to the starving people of Somalia. Somalia has been in the midst of anarchy and chaos since the government of President Mohammed Siad Barre fell in January 1991. Nail.

Now, almost a year later, the United States decides to take action. Once again, the United States has demonstrated its ineptitude to act on a problem when it occurs.

During his speech, Bush continually reiterated the military was only there to protect and ensure the delivery of supplies and not take a militarily offensive stance . They would, however, engage in military exchange if fired upon — which is a sure bet.

The audacity of President Bush to claim the possibility of warfare is remote is only a further indication of the lying and betrayal that has characterized his presidency. Hammer.

In a country where thousands of people die every day because of starvation, and many more are killed in bloody battles to gain control, it is crazy to think our military can make things better. By sending our troops over to Somalia, we will only heighten the tension between the waring thugs and thieves who are plaguing an already beleaguered country.

Nuns and missionaries have already been killed in attacks this year in Somalia. Now, it will be U.S. soldiers returning home in body bags with their toes tagged. These warlords have no problem killing innocent people either by stealing food or firing a gun. To think U.S. troops are above the violence that riddles Somalia is a frightening testament to the blind faith that rules our government.

Of course the United States should be concerned about the horrendous conditions the people of Somalia are enduring. We are all disturbed by the images and the suffering we witness. However, the answer doesn't lie in sending our version of trained killers over to restore order and harmony.

Maybe it is the challenge of a military engagement in a country we haven't helped to establish militarily. El Salvador, Guatemala and even Iraq. Nail. Where were our humanitarian instincts for the people of these countries?

Regardless of how disturbing or horrifying the situation may be, it is not going to be solved with guns and ammunition.

Even if the United States could restore some semblance of order in Somalia, it would only signify the beginning of the troubles that lie ahead. Like the colonial days of the past, the United States seems poised to resurrect the same type of imperialism. What was once called "exploration" is today called a "humanitarian mission."

After the fighting has ceased, and an attempt is made to restore a government in Somalia, you can bet the United States will expect to have a voice in making that decision. Hammer. It doesn't matter how "rich" or how "powerful" we are as a nation. We don't have any right to use our military to determine the politics of another country.

Sending food and supplies is humanitarian. Sending killers, bullets and weapons is thievery.

Hammer. Nail.

Keep the alcohol out of your driving time

Editor,

Christmas break will soon be upon us, and most of will be doing some sort of traveling for the holidays. During this next month or so of heavy traffic and constantly changing road conditions, it is especially important that each of us drive as alertly and with as much care as possible.

Please remember to keep alcohol and driving separate, especially during the Christmas season. Best of luck to everyone on finals and Happy Holidays.

▶ RAPE PREVENTION

Don't assume that clothes send messages

Editor,

I was upset by some of the views expressed in Liana Riesinger's Dec. 3 article, "Workshop examines attitudes." The article described a Rape Awareness Workshop presented by the directors of the Women's Resource Center. In it, Judy Davis, the center's director, said, "we give young boys mixed messages," using a cover of Glamour magazine as proof. She said the cover was ironic because under a headline "1,400 stories of sexual abuse" was a model dressed in a way that said (in Davis' opinion), "I'm ready."

First, we cannot assume any woman is trying to say "I'm ready" simply be the clothing she is wearing. Perhaps the model was intending to look sexy, but that is not the same as saying "I'm ready."

Second, Davis states that it is contradictory for her picture to appear with an outcry toward sexual violence. Why? I am always against sexual violence; it doesn't matter what I'm wearing. Is Davis saying the model is welcoming sexual violence based on what she is wearing? These assumptions cannot be made by anyone.

I would be particularly concerned if the director of our Women's Resource Center held these opinions. I am not saying that is her opinion, but since I was not at the workshop on Dec. 2, I could only draw my conclusions from Thursday's article. Somehow, an absurdity was expressed, and it was either Davis' opinion or Riesinger's play on words. Either way, someone needs to choose her words more carefully.

▶ BURGLARY

Taking stuff home not such a bad idea

Editor,

I am writing in regards to the Dec. 7 Collegian articles on burglars. Both articles were very informative and helpful. It's disturbing to me to think there are people out there taking advantage of others away for the holidays. It's too bad that not only do we have to worry about getting home safely, but we also have to worry about loading up all our belongings before we go.

After reading your stories, I, for one, will take your advice and take home all of my belongings. Thanks for the information.

Paper finally scores with Hart, Spradlin

Editor,

I have been at K-State for two and a half years, and during that time I have occasionally picked up the Collegian. The editorial page, in my opinion, has always been lacking.

Every once in a while, one of the columnists will sort of have an idea, and in a roundabout way kind of come to a point. The editorials have been poorly written, occasionally offensive, of questionable subject matter and, most of all, boring.

This year, however, something different has happened. I have begun reading the Collegian more regularly because two writers have consistently written columns worth reading. I have appreciated their views and enjoyed reading their columns. Not only do they write well, but they make you think.

Yes, John Hart and Scott Spradlin have been a welcome change in the Collegian this year.

▶ ORTHODOXY

Look at issues from your own perspective

Editor,

For once, I find myself in complete agreement with John Hart. One should not automatically accept or reject anything labeled orthodox. Nor should one automatically accept or reject anything labeled liberal or conservative.

An idea should not be attacked because of how the media or politicians or anyone else labels it. Too many people let themselves be swayed by their political party or by media figures. One should carefully examine an idea to determine whether it fits in their personal belief system and forget these worthless labels.

▶ HELPING HANDS

Selfless people push others up icy hills

Editor,

I saw something really fantastic last weekend. When everything seems bad, and things aren't going your way, there's always something that occurs to change your entire view.

I'm talking about the snow and terribly slick roads last weekend. It personally took me 40 minutes to get from one side of the town to the other. The roads were really bad on the hills, where cars had difficulty getting up them. When I was watching from my porch across the street from the dorms, the cars couldn't even get up the hill. When this all seemed really bad, about 10 to 15 guys from surrounding areas volunteered their Saturday night to help the cars get up the hill. They must have been out there for at least two hours in the cold, pushing cars.

With the holidays coming, this story seemed appropriate. Getting isn't everything. You must give to get, and these guys gave their help to the people trying desperately to get home. They are all caring individuals, and I commend them all. Thank you for your sincerity.

Parenting alone still tough

Single parents meet to 'share and pool resources'

KIM MCNITT
Collegian

Parenting is always challenging, but doing it alone means twice the responsibilities and twice the challenges.

Forty-seven parents attended the single-parent event last night at the Woodrow Wilson School.

Unified School District 383 and New Directions, a K-State outreach program for single parents and displaced homemakers, co-sponsored the evening's program.

This was the fifth year for the event, said Kay Ediger, coordinator and Woodrow Wilson School social worker. Attendance is usually 45-50 parents.

"Being a single parent is difficult and rewarding," said Ediger, who is a single parent herself.

"I think that being a single parent is a really challenging job, so it's important to make use of all the resources you can," Ediger said.

Ediger said one of the greatest benefits of the event can be to allow single parents to meet other single parents, so that they may share and pool resources.

Handouts were distributed with community resources that single parents may use.

Representatives from Konza Connection, Parents Without Partners, Singles in Agriculture and a divorce support group gave short presentations on their organizations.

Parents chose one of three programs to attend.

Bob Parr, education coordinator for Fort Riley Counseling Services, discussed ways to reduce stress. He emphasized that stress is normal and that the key is balance.

"It's important to work some, it's important to play some, and it's important to rest some," Parr said.

Lori Reckling Peterson, marriage and family counselor, presented the program "Single Parent Families Can Be Strong Families Too."

Peterson said one-fourth of American homes today are single-parent homes.

Steve and Patty Clark discussed raising biracial children.

The Clarks are a biracial couple raising three children and shared the knowledge they've gained from their experiences.

Sarah David, single mother of a 6- and 8-year-old, said this was the second year she'd attended the event.

"I think it's important that single parents get together to talk about what they're dealing with," David said.

She said she also thought the resource directory was helpful.

Melanie Brockington, also a single mother, found the directory useful too.

"I feel it especially benefits those people who are new to the community — to help them gather resources," she said.

"They can connect with other single parents in the area and realize they aren't alone."

"It was a good night and a good turnout," Ediger said.

She said she hoped a single-parent support group would eventually be formed from the event.

MUSIC

Major label eyes Roach Factory

TED KADAU JR.
Collegian

The new year may bring more than holiday cheer for the four-man lineup of the band Roach Factory. It may land them a nice, fat record deal.

The band will be in Hollywood, Calif., in January cutting a demo tape in the studios of A&M records. The deal is for a four-song demo and is the culmination of a lot of effort on the band's part.

"We sent out a number of tapes to record labels, both small and major, mostly those that were suitable to our style of music," guitarist Brian McCallum said. "We got a few call-backs, and then in July, Steve Riccardo, from A&M came to see us during the pub crawl in Lawrence."

After viewing the band in action, Riccardo liked what he saw and offered them the opportunity. Although A&M pays for the studio time, band members must find their own transportation and lodging.

"They'll spend the first couple of days rehearsing and choosing tracks," manager Carrie Miller said. "Four songs is the goal, but we'd like to record as many songs a possible. It all depends on the band and the engineer."

The extended studio time is also important, because it will be the most time the band has ever spent recording.

"The most time we have ever spent recording was 12 hours. This time, we'll get around 70. I think we're going in a lot more prepared than they think we are," drummer Erik Conn said. "We've gotten a lot better since the last demo and are really hoping to get a recording that we can be proud of."

At this time, however, band members have no idea what material will be on the demo and said A&M will most likely choose it for them.

If the record company is interested in the music, it will then make the band an offer. Roach Factory then will be given six months to shop the tape around the industry and, at the end of the six months, A&M has the option to meet or beat other offers.

Group members said this opportunity won't inflate the group's ego.

"Over the years, we haven't received any handouts, and we've been out there paying our dues," Conn said. "We don't want it to seem like Roach Factory is going to California to become rock stars. We just want to play our music and try to make good."

contributions directly to Carlotte's parents," Archer said.

"I also sent a letter to African-American faculty members and students and to multicultural student organizations, including HALO, BSU, Native American groups," she added.

Archer wrote: "Because of the devastation, total loss and financial impact suffered by her and her family, financial resources are greatly needed for Carlotte to continue school and to help her family through this ordeal."

She also wrote a letter to social work faculty members and the director of housing, where Moore was formerly employed.

"I tried to provide an opportunity for people to respond," Archer said.

Moore said many people have responded to her family's needs.

"People have sent monetary gifts, sheets and towels," she said. "You name it — we've got it."

Shirlyn Brown, student government graduate assistant, said Black Pan-Hellenic Council sponsored an information booth in the K-State Union last week to let the campus know about Moore's situation.

Moore is president of the council.

"She's a hard worker," Brown said. "She's a dedicated, good person."

Moore said she did not expect such a response.

"I was very surprised," Moore said. "I feel really special."

hours before the main force entered Mogadishu.

The special forces team, faces smeared with black and green camouflage cream, and armed with automatic rifles, anti-tank missiles and machine guns, was caught in the glare of TV lights and surrounded by 50 to 75 journalists.

Although the Marines expected no confrontations with Mogadishu's thousands of young militiamen, they were taking no chances.

They detained six Somalis at an airport hangar, making them lie flat with rifles pointed at their backs.

The Somalis turned out to be employees whom the Pakistani U.N. peacekeepers permitted to sleep at the airport.

Nine other Somalis were arrested later. A checkpoint was set up outside the airport.

Mogadishu was unusually quiet early today. There were sporadic bursts of gunfire, but they were far from the airport.

The 1,800-member advance team of America's Operation Restore Hope included a three-ship amphibious assault unit led by the USS Tripoli, backed by a Navy group led by the aircraft carrier USS Ranger with 60 warplanes.

current students is through the ambassadors.

"I think there is a lot of pressure to represent the student body in a positive light to the alumni, because I think it's important, especially in the financial need that we are in, to have their support," she said.

Riley, a senior in English, has a history of involvement at K-State and in the community.

She was a three-term student senator and Student Senate chairwoman last year, and this year is Senate Academic Affairs chairwoman. She is also a Blue Key member and is active in Union Program Council.

The ambassador selection process is designed to narrow the applicants to those students with truly purple blood.

Riley's had an advantage. Her life seems to have been intricately entwined with K-State.

She said she was born across the street from the football stadium and raised in Manhattan.

Years ago in that stadium, her mother became the Homecoming Queen, the title that preceded that of ambassador.

"It feels like I'm following in my mom's footsteps in a way. It's really neat in a personal way for me and my family," she said.

Riley has had to curtail graduation plans since becoming a K-State Ambassador, but she said she's glad to do it.

"One of the best things about being an ambassador is that it gives me justification to my parents for staying at K-State for another year," she said.

system of support. The kids at Ogden are reflective of the nation."

Most kids might not have a teacher like Anderson, though. He's made the effort to visit students at home and in the hospital. Chrissy Kirkpatrick is one of those students.

"He visited me twice this year," she said. "If you're gone two or three days sick, he comes and visits you."

Anderson said he also visits former students who have gone on to make the honor roll at Manhattan middle and high schools.

Anderson grew up in Georgia. In high school, he said, he had planned on going into the Air Force, but a counselor told him he shouldn't waste his talent for education.

In the 1960s, he took a position with the Kansas City public schools. In 1972, he said, minority recruitment programs brought him to Manhattan, where he taught at Roosevelt School for 17 years.

Anderson's been teaching at Ogden for six years.

"What made me stay in the area is having kids who appreciate education," he said. "And every year it gets better and better."

Anderson, who is black, said his ethnic background has rarely been a problem in the classroom.

"I zero in on that first thing. I don't want it to be a problem," he said. "We all work together as one."

BRIAN ANDERSON

A crowd of 5,013 — the smallest crowd in Bramlage Coliseum history — witnessed the Cats, now 3-0, post a controversial overtime victory over the 0-3 Ohio Bobcats.

K-State overcame a 10-point Ohio lead to send the game into overtime and win 73-72 on a shot from senior Vincent Jackson with four seconds to play.

"In the last time out, we called for Vince to drive to the hole," Coach Dana Altman said. "He's a senior, and I felt comfortable with him to have the ball."

After taking a pass from guard Anthony Beane, Jackson drove to the basket, shot over a Bobcat. The ball hit the glass and fell through.

"I felt it was a good shot," Jackson said of his only field goal of the game. "I had to put touch on it to make it go through.

"When Coach called the play, I knew I could hit it," he said.

But the game wasn't over.

The Bobcats got the ball and were moving the ball down the right side of the court. A Bobcat and a Cat fell to the court. The official whistled a foul, but the time trickled off the clock, and the game ended.

K-State fought back when the Cats were down 48-38 with 17:25 left in regulation. The Cats went on a 17-2 run and shut out Ohio for eight minutes.

"We were in great danger," Altman said. "We turned it up a notch."

The 17-2 run was fueled by three 3-pointers as K-State regained the lead. Two of the 3-pointers were made by Henson, the Cats leading scorer with 17 points. Jones, who tied Mitch Richmond for third place on the K-State career 3-point charts with 58, fired the other shot from behind the arch.

Slowly, Ohio crawled back with nearly nine minutes left in regulation to tie the game. Gus Johnson got Ohio within two with 2:14 to play.

Deryl Cunningham, who had a career-high 14 points, missed a one-and-one shot with 1:53 left in the game.

K-State got one more chance to score when it pressured Bobcats as Ohio brought the ball down the court. Beane came away with a steal but missed his shot. But Cunningham rebounded and scored from underneath with 30 seconds in the game.

K-State jumped to a 15-4 lead to start the game before the Bobcats took a 33-31 margin into halftime.

"Ohio came in here and scrapped," Altman said. "They're a very good ball club. We were very fortunate to win."

Ohio was led in scoring by freshman Gary Trent. Trent scored 22 points and pulled down eight rebounds.

"We didn't do well covering him," Altman said. "(Ron) Lucas got around him and denied him the ball in the second half."

Trent scored 14 points in the first half before being slowed by the Cat defense. He made 11 of 13 field goals.

Leviathan lurks for ice fishers

"Loooord, it's as big as a god-damned baby!" — Robert Earl Keen Jr., "Five Pound Bass"

In February of 1985, a 35-pound striped bass was lifted from ice of Cheney Reservoir near Wichita. It was the state record for a while.

Every winter since, Kansas ice-fishers have caught stripers weighing at least 25 pounds.

Try to imagine it. Your power auger has hacked through the ice, and now you sit in a folding chair, your short ice rod in your gloved hands. The line is hanging straight into the water.

It is positively glacial, so nippy your ears have retrogressed into your scalp. Your friends back in the city think you are crazy. And you are.

The line goes tight, and you reel in a fish too huge to fit through the hole. Then the ice breaks, and you fall in.

Forget the falling-in part, and it can be the acme of your angling life.

Crappie, striped bass and white bass are easy to catch when the cold winds blow, and the top five inches of Kansas lakes freeze thick. The real sport is not dying.

Hypothermia kills quickly. Drowning may precede hypothermia if the current is moving under the ice.

The challenge is to wait for safe ice. Some winters are too warm to freeze deep enough. And warm currents can make certain sections of ice shallower than others. Watch where you walk.

BUBBA SKOOG

Ice fishers usually start in the upper one-third of a lake, along the inlet channels in five to 20 feet of water.

Gizzard shad is preferred for ice fishing, as cold water stresses shad, killing much of the population.

A fish strikes with less vigor in the winter. Ultralight tackle and sensitive rods help indicate a strike.

There's not a bunch of strategy once the bait goes through the hole, unless waiting is a strategy. Don't stomp around or start a fire on the ice. Smoke cigarettes, eat beef jerky, remain calm. Do not think about cracks in ice.

Once the fish is on the hook, there is the problem of removing the leviathan from the fishy depths. Doubtless, the hole you cut will be too small for the fish you catch or just barely wide enough.

A gaff hook will help some here. They are stronger and will take more jostling without giving up the fish.

Tuttle Creek Reservoir is good for ice fishing, especially crappie and white bass.

Cheney Reservoir will yield many large stripers, as well as crappie and white bass.

Glen Elder, Wilson and Council Grove are also noted for ice fishing.

There are no limits on white bass. Striped bass have a limit of two per day, and crappie have a limit of 50.

SPORTS DIGEST

▶ROYALS SIGN CONE

LOUISVILLE, Ky. (AP) — David Cone returned to the Kansas City Royals on Tuesday, agreeing to a three-year contract.

Cone, a 29-year-old right-hander, has led the major leagues in strikeouts for the past three seasons. Cone was 14-8 in 1989, 14-10 in 1990 and 14-14 in 1991, leading the NL in strikeouts in his last two full years with the Mets.

It was Kansas City's second big deal of the day. Earlier, the Royals agreed to a $10.7-million, three-year contract with shortstop Greg Gagne.

▶BASEBALL UPDATES

(AP) — Tis the season for baseball.

Barry Bonds' record $43.75-million, six-year deal with the San Francisco Giants was finalized Tuesday after endless haggling among lawyers in a three-sided negotiation.

The world champion Toronto Blue Jays made a stunning acquisition late Monday night, signing Paul Molitor to a three-year contract.

Steve Howe, who has been suspended from baseball seven times for substance abuse, agreed today with the New York Yankees on a $4.2 million, two-year contract.

The Boston Red Sox said goodbye to Wade Boggs on Monday night, refusing to offer him salary arbitration.

INSIDE STUFF

Ohio coach upset with controversial ending

STEVE ROCK
Collegian

Tuesday night, the Cats may have gotten away with one.

"I've been a coach for 17 years, and I've seen a lot of things," Ohio coach Larry Hunter said. "And I think that was one of the worst."

"That" was the controversial manner in which the Cats' 73-72 victory over the Ohio ended.

With just under four seconds to play in overtime, K-State's Vincent Jackson made a basket that put the Cats up by one. The Bobcats, who had no timeouts, quickly threw the ball in. Freshman guard Gus Johnson raced towards mid-court and was seemingly fouled by Jackson.

The official, after a brief hesitation, whistled the play dead and motioned a blocking foul — a foul that would have put Ohio on the free-throw line with a chance to win the game.

But as the ball rolled towards the sideline, and the final seconds ticked away, the officials ran off the court.

"It was a foul on the offensive dribble," Ron Zetcher, a Big Eight official, said. "My partner told me he thought the horn had gone off."

As it was, the Cats record improved to 3-0.

"I saw a block called," Hunter said. "But then the other official waves him off the floor.

"You want to cry. You almost have to laugh."

Perhaps it wasn't the first time Hunter wanted to cry.

The Ohio bench was called for a technical foul early in the first period. At the end of regulation, Cat guard Anthony Beane stole the ball from the Bobcats on a play that led to the Cats' tying bucket — a play that he said he thought merited a whistle.

"At the end of regulation, we get killed," he said.

But it was the play that ended the game that he said was the most costly.

"It was just a heck of a ball game, and I think other people decided the outcome."

Did the fact that those "other people" were Big Eight officials mean anything?

"You saw the game," Hunter said. "You don't have to ask."

Wildcat coach Dana Altman said that he didn't see whether or not the time had run off the clock when the call was made.

"I thought the game was very close to over," he said. "I'm just going to have to look at the film and see what happened. I'm not really sure."

And Jackson, who very nearly was both the hero and the goat in a span of three seconds, said that he didn't foul Johnson.

"I just hit the ball, and it went out of bounds."

CRAIG HACKER/Collegian

Larry Hunter, Ohio head coach, yells at referees about a traveling call he thought they missed. The Ohio bench received a technical.

YOU'RE ASKING ME?

by Cassandra Duveaux

Reader finds response given to J.A.S. 'intolerant'

DEAR CASSANDRA,

While I usually agree with your responses, I found it discomforting that you called J.A.S. intolerant in the beliefs of others. I don't think using the words "morals" or "religion" makes a person intolerant. Your response seemed to say, "You can't talk about morals. That's a religious thing (and hence, you are intolerant)."

What's wrong with talking about morals? Our country is full of them, i.e. stealing, lying, adultery, murder, etc. These morals are common across our country and only vary slightly in interpretation (i.e. abortion isn't murder). Why does talking about morals make a person intolerant of others?

By dismissing J.A.S.'s opinion as being intolerant, you could be accused of being intolerant as well. Your response seems to be a common reaction to someone else's opinion that happens to be different than their own.

Often, it seems, those who claim to be open-minded and progressive believe that those who use humanistic arguments have "opinion," while those who use religious arguments are "intolerant." Not extremely open-minded.

I believe the abortion issue could be argued using a humanistic standpoint from both sides. However, if someone wants to use a religious belief to justify their opinion on the issue, I do not believe that makes the person the Grand Inquisitor or on some religious crusade.

This country was built upon religious tolerance, and that doesn't mean you have to be humanistic to be tolerant. It is possible to be tolerant and have an opinion.

Be careful who you call intolerant; remember, what goes around comes around.

Bill T. Cat

DEAR B.T.C.,

I suggest you take a second look at J.A.S. It was J.A.S. who said a professor should not express an opinion on abortion — I call that intolerance. It was J.A.S. who said "people" need to understand that abortion is wrong. That does not sound to me like just an opinion, but rather a prescription others must use and follow, or they are being immoral. You call that tolerance?

I think it is obvious that J.A.S. meant for the words "morals" and "religion" to be used interchangeably, which excludes a large amount of philosophy containing guidelines for ethical behavior that have nothing to do with a Supreme Being or Creator.

I think it is quite obvious that J.A.S. was not speaking for all religious beliefs, but rather one set of religious beliefs in particular, and not morals in general, but a specific, yet unnamed (though apparent) set of moral laws. For you to state that "morals are common across our country and only vary slightly" reveals a serious gap in your education.

There is nothing wrong with "talking" about morals and religion. It is when a specific set of religious beliefs are termed "right" and others characterized as "wrong" that I must take umbrage. You are correct in pointing out that my response was intolerant. I am very intolerant of intolerance.

DEAR CASSANDRA,

I'm swamped with projects and five finals, and I want to get Christmas presents for friends and family. Any ideas on how to do it quickly? Without breaking my piggy bank?

Simple Santa

DEAR SIMPLE SANTA,

I enjoy receiving a gift certificate and find this to be a very practical (although somewhat impersonal) gift. Most retailers now offer these, and they can be made out for any amount you choose to spend.

A more personal gift for family is a small, stylish picture frame containing a recent photograph of you (moms and dads especially like this), or of the kids, if you have children.

Another idea involving photos is your own "personalized" calendar containing any picture you choose, enlarged and mounted as the "picture" of the month (a different picture each month). These are being offered at a local 24-hour copy service, and the cost is very reasonable.

You haven't much time, so tell Dancer to shake a leg. Ho Ho Ho.

Solutions from your Apple Campus Reseller:
The Apple Computer Loan.

"I expected to pay a lot more than $35 a month for a new Macintosh IIsi and a printer."

Jennifer Minaya
Nursing Major

Jennifer obtained an Apple Computer Loan* that allowed her to buy her Apple® Macintosh® IIsi and an Apple Personal LaserWriter® LS printer. She knew that owning a powerful Macintosh computer for her full course load and her work as a doctor's assistant was a smart thing to do. And the Apple Computer Loan was the smart way to do it: easy application, fast turnaround and low, flexible payment terms. So Jennifer went to the only place that offers the Apple Computer Loan, her Apple Campus Reseller.

Macintosh. It's more than a present, it's a future.

*Based on Jennifer Minaya's Apple Computer Loan of $3,077.76, her monthly payment was $35 (interest only) as of 10/7/92. Principal payments may be deferred up to 4 years. The interest rate is variable, and is based on the average of the higher of the 30-day or 90-day commercial paper rates as reported in the Wall Street Journal, plus a spread of 5.35% (not to exceed 5.6%). The term of the loan is 8 years with no pre-payment penalty. The total finance charge on every $1,000 borrowed will be $543.38. Each applicant pays a $35.00 non-refundable application fee. Approved borrowers will be charged a 4% loan origination fee. The loan origination fee will be added to the requested loan amount and repaid over the life of the loan. For the month of October 1992, the interest rate was 7.6% with an APR of 8.85%.

Ultralites confront negativity

DARREN WHITLEY/Collegian

Ultralite Dance/Step team members Tara Girard (foreground), freshman in occupational therapy, and Angela Smith, senior in pre-law and psychology, dance to Whitney Houston's "Jesus Loves Me" during a speak-out Wednesday in the K-State Union Courtyard.

Dance team speaks out on poor treatment of multicultural groups

KARREY BRITT
Collegian

The captain of the Ultralites Dance/Step team said the team wants the opportunity to perform and give K-State students the chance to enjoy multicultural dance.

"We need to educate K-State," said team captain Angela Smith, senior in pre-law and psychology, at a speak-out Wednesday in the K-State Union Courtyard. "There are enough policies and fluff to cover the real issues."

Smith said the Ultralites Dance/Step team has had trouble getting performances and received a lot of negative comments.

"Members of our squad have been discouraged because of the negative comments," Smith said. "One girl who was going to join our team was told by a cheerleader not to because we had a bad image.

"The girl told me the cheerleader promised her a position on their squad the next year as she would be a judge."

Smith asked students if they thought the cheerleaders represent the campus. Several students replied "Hell no."

Smith said she tried out for the cheerleading squad this year and last year, but wasn't selected either time.

"A white female made the squad who had fallen during tryouts and was allowed to start over," she said. "This was very discouraging for me after working and practicing so hard."

Smith said she is not the only one having trouble being treated fairly at K-State. She gave several examples of friends who are facing the same problems.

"K-State, I think we have been robbed long enough," she said repeatedly. "I cannot believe I am paying money for this University."

The team has started a petition directed to President Jon Wefald, the cheerleading squad and the athletic department to show how unfairly multicultural organizations are treated at K-State, Smith said.

She said the rumor of the team duplicating the Classy Cats or cheerleaders is false.

"We are not just a duplicate of the Classy Cats with pom-pons," she said. "Let us show you what we are all about."

They then performed for students packed in the Courtyard and those watching from the balconies.

Somalis meet Hope troops with welcome

ASSOCIATED PRESS

MOGADISHU, Somalia — U.S. Marines freed the capital from the grip of warring gunmen Wednesday.

And they opened the way for mighty air convoys of soldiers and supplies to revive Somalia's starving interior.

The first mercy flight to Mogadishu hours after troops stormed ashore brought in powdered formula for famished children and adults.

The Marines' next goal was to seize inland airstrips from bandits so that big U.S. transports can fly in tons of life-giving grain where it is needed most. The first of thousands of Army troops for the mission were to arrive today, Defense Secretary Dick Cheney said in Washington.

Amid the thump of chopper blades and the rumble of amphibious vehicles, Somalis crowded hillsides and jammed into the airport to welcome the 1,800 Marines who brought Mogadishu one of its most peaceful days since civil war broke out two years ago.

There was no resistance.

The teen-age gunmen and their cannon-mounted jeeps — the terror of the city since President Mohamed Siad Barre was overthrown in January 1991 — appeared mostly to have slipped out of town and into the bush.

But reporters saw youths riding in one pickup truck dismount two machine guns and stow them on the floor as the pickup approached a Marine checkpoint.

Mogadishu was in a festive

Plans threaten Art Building

Firm presents expansion blueprints to students, faculty

SHEDERA BAUSCH
Collegian

Plans call for the Art Building east of Farrell Library to be demolished in order to expand the library, Farrell Library Dean Brice Hobrock said.

The plans for the expansion and renovation were disclosed Tuesday night at the library by Tom Beeby, architect with the Brent Bowman firm.

Students and faculty could study the plans and listen to the architecture firm's presentation for construction.

"Subject to approval of the state Legislature, the concept calls for removal of the Art Building to conduct major expansion to the east," Hobrock said.

Hobrock said the library plans will be presented to the state Legislature in mid-December by the Kansas Board of Regents and state architecture board, then the construction plans will be confirmed.

"We want to make a better working library from the one that

Bramlage fee to get 2nd look

Tribunal to report on rules regarding bill reconsideration

KIM MCNITT
Collegian

The agenda for tonight's Student Senate meeting has the makings of another long and controversial night.

"Almost everything on the agenda has the potential to be very controversial," Student Body President Jackie McClaskey said.

The Bramlage fee continuance bill has the potential for much discussion. The fee was rejected at the Nov. 20 meeting, but a motion was immediately made to reconsider. It was then tabled until last week's meeting.

However, student tribunal said last week that the motion was out of order. According to tribunal's interpretation of the constitution, Senate has only one week to reconsider bills.

Tribunal is to present a more detailed report on Senate's ability to reconsider bills tonight, and Senate may then act on the Bramlage fee continuance.

"I believe the fee will be reconsidered," McClaskey said. "I don't know whether or not it will pass, but I think it will be brought up."

Attorney General Mike Porter said tribunal had met to clarify some rules about reconsideration, and it is in accordance with the constitution if it is in accordance with Robert's Rules of Order, a parliamentary guidebook.

"There could be some things in Robert's Rules that could stop them from reconsidering the fee, but that would be parliamentary and not due to tribunal's decision," Porter said.

Graduate Sen. Joel Gruenke, Senate parliamentarian, said he believes Robert's Rules would allow reconsideration.

Senators will also decide whether K-State should have a student vice

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. — People seeking top government jobs from President-elect Clinton will have to do more than pass a job interview.

Tough new ethics rules unveiled Wednesday require them to sign an unprecedented pledge meant to keep them from cashing in on their government connections down the road.

The rules are designed to slam — or at least slow — what has become known as Washington's revolving door, which allows federal officials to turn around and lobby their former agencies a year after leaving government service.

Current law bars most federal employees from lobbying their agencies for a year.

"In recent years, too many high officials began to sell their access and influence almost the day after they left office," transition director Warren Christopher said. "That saps public confidence in the entire political process."

The same refrain had been repeated throughout the presidential campaign and struck a chord with voters. Clinton pledged to enact ethics reforms if elected, and Ross Perot ridiculed high-price lobbyists "in alligator shoes" for selling their country short after leaving government.

"Taxpayers need to know that

PLEDGING ALLEGIANCE

Under rules announced Wednesday, approximately 1,100 top-level appointees, which is about the top third of Clinton's appointees, will have to pledge:

- They will not lobby their former agencies for five years.
- They will never become registered foreign agents for any foreign government or foreign political party.
- In addition, government trade negotiators will be required to pledge that they will not lobby for foreign governments of businesses for five years after they participate in negotiations.

NEWS DIGEST

▶BLAST CITED IN DEATH OF 8 VIRGINIA MINERS

NORTON, Va. (AP) — Rescue workers Wednesday night recovered the bodies of seven of the eight miners missing more than a mile underground since a mine explosion Monday.

Bill Tattersall, assistant U.S. labor secretary for mine safety and health, said it appeared the explosion killed them.

The search for the eighth miner was called off because methane gas levels became dangerously high, rescuers said.

Families awaited the news of their relatives for more than 60 hours, holding out hope that the miners were still alive.

It was the worst mining disaster in Virginia since 1957, when 37 miners died in an explosion in Tazewell County. The cause of the explosion hasn't been determined.

STATE LEGISLATURE

Lawmakers seek to shorten sessions

ASSOCIATED PRESS

TOPEKA — Three Republican legislators launched efforts Wednesday to win adoption of a proposed constitutional amendment to shorten the Legislature's annual session.

Sponsoring the proposal are senator-elect Mark Parkinson of Olathe, Rep. Kent Glasscock, R-Manhattan and representative-elect Gary Haulmark of Lenexa. It is designed to cut 15 working days from the session.

Parkinson, Glasscock and Haulmark said they are concerned that longer sessions make it harder for working Kansans, especially professionals, to serve in the Legislature. They also believe the proposal could save taxpayers $1 million.

"We have to decide what kind of Legislature we want," Glasscock said during a Statehouse news conference. "Kansas traditionally has had a citizen Legislature."

Currently, the state constitution puts no limit on sessions in odd-numbered years and declares that sessions in even-numbered years will last 90 working days, unless two-thirds of the members of both houses vote to extend it.

Agriculture college honors alumnus

STEPHEN MCKEE
Collegian

Fred Germann, a 1949 K-State graduate, received the 1992 College of Agriculture Distinguished Alumnus Award at the Homecoming agriculture alumni gathering Nov. 21.

The award recognizes living alumni who personify the College of Agriculture's tradition of excellence, bringing distinction to themselves and to the University, said William Amstein Jr., agriculture alumni coordinator.

"I was extremely flattered they thought I was worthy," Germann said. "I have always been connected and interested in K-State. It was a real honor to receive this award."

Germann has been devoted to the farming industry his whole life, said his brother-in-law John Wilson.

"He's been a lifelong outstanding farmer. He started out in 4-H by showing pigs, and he went from there to create a good industry."

In the application for nomination, Germann's nephew Ron Wilson wrote: "He has given greatly of himself to his profession, to KSU and to his fellow man. He is a successful and innovative livestock producer who has served as president of KLA (Kansas Livestock Association), Pork Producer's Council and KSU's Essential Edge fund drive."

Among his achievements in the farming industry, Germann said his main interest is in pork production. He was a pioneer in producing Specific Pathogen Free (SPF) Durocs and Yorkshires.

For several years, his herd produced more recorded purebred SPF litters than any other producer in the nation.

"In my many years in this industry, I have primarily worked in the livestock area," Germann said. "I've always done what I could to serve that industry."

He was also a charter member of the K-State-based Livestock and Meat Industry Council. As council president for three years, he led the group's support for the agriculture industry.

"I enjoyed being a part of the Livestock and Meat Industry Council because we supported the industry by raising a considerable amount of money. The money was used at the University to aid in research, award scholarships and improve facilities."

Germann has also been a community leader.

He was the Geary County Farm Bureau Leader of the Year in 1971 and has served on the state Farm Bureau commodities committee. He has been the agricultural representative on the Geary County Extension Council.

Germann is currently a board member of the First State Bank in Junction City, and he served on the board of the Flint Hills Rural Electric Cooperative for nine years.

Although Germann has achieved many things in his lifetime, he said he probably takes the most pride in his connection to K-State.

"In our farming operations, we have used a number of K-State people. It has really been an honor and privilege to see those people go on and succeed in life," he said.

Farrell construction slated for 1994

currently exists today," Beeby said.

The library is made up of three structures, he said.

The original T-shaped building was constructed in the 1920s, the larger square structure was added in the 1950s, and the glazed window addition was built onto the south side of the library in the 1970s.

"Each building is built from the style of its period. Our main concern with this renovation is to unify the building," Beeby said.

Beeby said the 1994 structure will integrate and upgrade the current building.

The renovation will give the library a look much like the other buildings on campus, he said.

"We are making the building compatible to the existing campus," Beeby said.

The construction will start in January 1994 and is estimated to take 30 months, costing $28 million.

"Students are supplying $5 million, outside donations make up $5 million dollars and $18 million is coming from within the state," Hobrock said.

The library construction will double the size of Farrell, he said.

It will increase space available by 80 percent. This includes more space for books and computers, and increases the seating capacity from 850 to 2,000.

Violence in India at a high

ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW DELHI, India — Rioters wielding hatchets and homemade bombs rampaged throughout India on Wednesday in a third day of religious violence.

Reports said nearly 700 people died in Hindu-Muslim fighting, including 200 on Wednesday alone.

Zealots left a trail of brutality and desecration as they battled over the demolition of an ancient mosque by Hindu extremists on Sunday.

Since then, Bombay's slum district, Dharabi, a patchwork of Hindu and Muslim colonies, has become a war zone. Nightly raiding parties attack neighboring colonies with knives, hatchets, Molotov cocktails and acid-filled light bulbs.

Army units, with shoot-on-sight authority, were sent to assist police in enforcing a curfew in the city of 12 million, India's largest and the hardest hit by the religious violence.

The Hindu nationalist Bharatiya Janata Party called a general strike to protest the arrest of its leaders, who are charged with instigating the demolition of the mosque in the northern holy town of Ayodhya.

Prime Minister P.V. Narasimha Rao met leaders of the National Front, a leftist opposition coalition, to appeal for an alliance against the Hindu nationalist party in an attempt to quell the violence. He accused the Bharatiya Janata of "extreme perfidy" by encouraging the zealots who tore apart the mosque.

Devout Hindus believe the 430-year-old mosque stood on the ruins of a prehistoric Hindu shrine marking the birthplace of Rama, an important god in Hindu mythology.

K-State's director of student financial assistance has been named vice president of the Rocky Mountain Association of Student Financial Aid Administrators.

Larry Moeder's main duties in the role will be updating the bylaws, coordinating committees and attending two board meetings, former vice president Jeannie Schmidt said.

Journalist visits KSU in search of solutions

LISA COLE

A Paraguayan journalist is hoping some solutions for environmental problems in her country may be found in Kansas.

Bibi Yurrita, an environmental journalist from Asuncion, Paraguay, is in Kansas this week as a part of Kansas-Paraguay Partners. Yurrita is the Paraguayan chair for the organization's natural resources subcommittee.

Kansas-Paraguay Partners is a part of the larger Partners of the Americas program, which matches Latin American or Caribbean nations with American states.

"It's a voluntary, person-to-person information and skills exchange," said Wayne Geyer, professor of forestry and the Kansan chairman for the Kansas-Paraguay natural resources subcommittee.

Partners of the Americas includes 27 Latin American and Caribbean nations linked with 45 states to form 56 partnerships. Each partner is represented by experts in fields such as health, agriculture, sports, emergency preparedness, natural resources and cultural arts.

Kansas paired up with Paraguay, a landlocked country in central South America, in 1968.

Mosque's destruction inane

THE ISSUE

The razing of the Babri mosque in India has caused much ethnic unrest.

It is difficult to exaggerate the significance of the wanton destruction of the Babri mosque in Ayodhya, India. The demolition of this mosque by a Hindu mob has poisoned the relationship between the two largest religious communities in India.

Devout Hindus believe the mosque stood on the ruins of a prehistoric Hindu shrine which marked the birthplace of Rama, an important god in Hindu mythology.

The mosque's destruction has prompted widespread violence and destruction in India and neighboring Pakistan and Bangladesh.

The Indian government put the death toll at 560 people dead and 2,475 wounded throughout India. News agencies have estimated the death toll to be near 700 people. This is believed to be more accurate.

This desecration will render the Kashmir problem more intractable than ever. And it will deepen the suspicion between a largely Hindu India and the Moslem nations of the subcontinent, Central Asia and the Middle East.

The outrage at Ayodhya is also a direct challenge to the secular state established after independence in 1947.

In demolishing the mosque and beginning construction of a temple on its ruins, the Hindu fanatics have defied a Supreme Court injunction. By are arguing that legal rulings are irrelevant in matters of faith, they are calling into question the values of a society which is based on the rule of law and religious pluralism.

Our society has fallen prey to a "Prime Directive" mentality.

For those of you who don't know, the "Prime Directive" is the overriding rule of the starship Enterprise on Star Trek. It holds that members of Starfleet will not in any way interfere with the progress of another civilization. It implies that lesser civilizations must be allowed to develop at their own pace.

It's only a fiction to keep a fictional Federation from looking like an expansionist colonial empire. And yet, a similar "Prime Directive" has become the centerpiece of U.S. foreign policy (CIA projects notwithstanding): "Thou shalt not interfere with the progress or politics of the Third World."

Victim to this policy for the past year have been the people of Somalia. For a year, U.S. policy makers, by refusing to send troops to help, allowed Somalis to starve. Helping the Somalis was not in "the national interest." Somalis must, it was claimed, be allowed to resolve the situation themselves.

"Besides," opponents claimed, "there are at least 15 other areas of the world where violence reigns unchecked. If we can't intervene in all of them, we shouldn't here either."

JOHN HAWKS

Now, at last, common sense has prevailed. After reports from the Pentagon showed that a U.S. military presence would probably be effective, due to the open terrain and ragtag nature of the combatants, the administration decided to offer U.S. help. The situation is significantly different from other world hot spots, where concerted opposition could make a military intervention fail.

It is clear that so far, the operation is working. The local warlords have fled from U.S.-controlled areas, and people are being fed.

But the "Prime Directive" of foreign policy is already making another appearance. Adherents to the commandment say that U.S. troops should stabilize the country and then get out as soon as possible. The United States, they say, should resist the opportunity to help alter Somali politics, letting the Somali solve their own problems.

That option is sheer insanity. If indeed the Somali would be allowed the voice to solve their country's problems, then that answer might be just. But leaving the people of Somalia to the whims of warlords is not a solution to the problem. It is a formula for more problems in the future.

It is clear that our military presence, or that of the United Nations, must continue until the relief-threatening violence has been ended. That will not occur until a firm government can be established in Somalia. We must guarantee that the new government includes the voices of the Somali people. That can only be accomplished if that government is established with the full advice of the international community, including the United States.

What we are seeing in Somalia is felt by some to be a dangerous precedent — the takeover of a country by the international community. But it is also a blow against our "Prime Directive." If the United States and the rest of the international community see this situation through to the end and do their best to help the Somali people resolve it, then they will be making a grand statement of international cooperation. If they pull out too soon, then the precedent will be one of failure.

We must absolve ourselves of the "Prime Directive." It is time we understood that underdeveloped nations are not "inferior cultures" that need to develop at their own pace. They are, rather, partners with us in the world — partners that at times may need a helping hand. We must do our best to bring to them the advantages that our social and technological development allows. We certainly won't always be right, but we can at least do our best. If we do, we will certainly make millions of lives better as a result.

Then may we all "live long, and prosper."

Affirmative action undermines integrity

It took me a long time and some research before I found the courage and the determination to express my views on the "racial issue" that undermines our nation. But this is it — be ready for a different perspective.

I am convinced that affirmative action and quotas are at the root of the non-progress of racial harmony and are largely responsible for the relative lack of economic power of the black community.

JEAN-IMMANUEL CHAPPUY
GUEST COLUMNIST

Affirmative action is a very hypocritical grievances office that, instead of entitling people with rights as individuals, entitles them according to their ethnic group or sex. Affirmative action carries the seeds of racism and sexism in its core in spreading the vision of ethnic antagonism.

A large part of the black population has a victim-focused identity, lacking self-esteem as well as self-confidence. As long as ethnic groups rely solely on quotas and special aid from the government, no real progress will ever occur for minorities.

Furthermore, the term "minorities" has over the past 20 years become synonymous with handicap, problems and weakness. In other words, it's a subliminal whisper that says, "You are not as good and able to succeed as if you were a white male, but here is a special program just for you." Is there anything more demeaning than to be patronized because of the color of your skin?

I denounce the position of affirmative action because it instills in minorities the belief that they can't help themselves and succeed on their own. That they need special assistance to achieve. Minorities will have to succeed on their own if they want to find pride in their accomplishments, self-esteem and respect.

It's a fact that self-made men and women get more respect and admiration than do heirs with inherited fortunes. It is also a fact that it is more satisfactory to get a job because you are the best applicant rather than wondering if the company needed to fill its quotas, not wanting to get into trouble with affirmative action.

Giving special treatment to an ethnic group is silently admitting and reinforcing the belief that this particular group can't make it on its own, and that skin color has an effect on our intellect.

This is nonsense. Affirmative action and quotas involuntarily perpetuate the racist belief that if you are a minority, you are not as smart as if you were a white male and are too weak to make it on your own.

The answer to America's racial tension will not find salvation through a system that divides people into groups. Discrimination can't be fought with another form of discrimination, but with the understanding and respect of one another's differences.

The question isn't to help or not help less fortunate people, but how we are going to allocate human and financial resources. Do we want to pursue the defensive strategy of victimization or a global strategy of learning about each other's cultures?

The answer to America's societal mess is in educating our people and in investing in our children so that each one will have a shot at the American dream. Educators and teachers have to show our children that there is more than one way to live a successful life. They must teach them to avoid focusing on minorities as victims.

We have to pull together, recognize our differences and similarities, step over disparities and finally unite as one people: the American people.

Nonsense? Read the following references found in Fortune magazine. All are from black leaders: "Democracy must entitle people as individuals. We cannot have it entitling one group of people over another. ... Ending racial preferences would send underdeveloped groups like black Americans a fair and honest message." — Shelby Steele, writer and professor of English at San Jose State University.

Thad Williams, developer in Los Angeles: "Blacks look at it (the government) as a friend that's going to give them something. That's terrible. This attitude has been ingrained into the African-American community for too long. ... Blacks say, 'The government will do for us what we won't do for ourselves.' No one is going to do for us what we won't do for ourselves."

Soldiers are capable of more than killing

Editor,

Reading Kelly Klawonn's latest diatribe led me to wonder if she ever reads the more reasoned columns that appear in the Collegian from time to time. John Hart gave us such a column on Dec. 7.

In it, he cautioned against the stereotypical thinking that "promotes patterns of intolerance and ignorance" and leads to the categorical rejection of ideas "because of political or ideological biases."

Referring to the soldiers ordered to Somalia as "trained killers" in her first paragraph, Klawonn gives clear warning of the mindless argument to follow. Her underlying bias is later revealed in her totally clumsy, unsupported conclusion, "Like the colonial days of the past, the United States seems poised to resurrect the same type of imperialism."

Soldiers are, of course, trained to kill. They are also trained to defend. They are trained in first aid, sanitation, logistics, communications, maintenance and traffic control, to name a few potentially useful services the starving Somali people might welcome. They do not have to kill in order to help. The survivors of Hurricane Andrew might gladly provide references.

Our shame, if any is to be assigned, lies in the failure of our country to act sooner, before the tragedy of 1,000 deaths a day in a country of 6 million people became a reality.

That President Bush failed to do so reflects, I think, a craven unwillingness to face the cynicism that would have greeted such action during a presidential campaign. That this humanitarian action can be so defamed even after the election and in full view of the unspeakable deprivation, suffering and victimization that is occurring in Somalia is a potent reminder of the power of ideology.

Klawonn professes to be disturbed by the images and suffering in Somalia, but not enough to do anything about it! In today's global village, if you are not part of the solution, you are part of the problem.

▶ SOMALIA AGAIN

Gaps in political logic mar columnist's view

Editor,

Kelly Klawonn seems to expect the impossible from our government. She wants our leaders to be the world's problem solvers and to fill that role in a manner reminiscent of a Judy Garland/Mickey Rooney movie ("Hey, kids, my dad has a barn we can use!").

Klawonn suggests the U.S. government is equipped to take care of every crisis outside our borders, that somehow President Bush should have done something when the government in Somalia fell. But doesn't that view contradict her fears about "imperialism"?

If "nuns and missionaries" are unable to fight off armed raiders while feeding the starving, and the U.S. military shouldn't be employed, who is equipped to do so?

Klawonn's column suggests that she failed to pay attention in her history courses. The U.S. military has successfully engaged in domestic and foreign humanitarian efforts in the past. A short list would include Hurricane Andrew, the Marshall Plan, the Berlin Airlift and the rebuilding of Japan's infrastructure.

For many reasons, the United States remains the best-equipped nation to help the United Nations solve problems, whether they be political or humanitarian.

▶ CROSSWALKS

Better lighting for safer crossing areas

Editor,

We always hear about the lighting problem on campus, but what about the lack of lighting around the edge of campus?

Other students and I have noticed how difficult it is to see people crossing the street in crosswalks on both Denison and Manhattan avenues.

While we worry about tearing the grass up every year, we could better be spending the money to possibly save lives by lighting crosswalks.

By painting the crosswalks with reflective paint more often, and by putting signs up before crosswalks, the chances of someone getting hit or having a close encounter would be drastically reduced. By putting a halogen spotlight on the crosswalk, drivers would definitely be able to see people in the crosswalk.

▶ SOMALIA ONCE AGAIN

Who will suffer the little children, Kelly?

Editor,

Kelly Klawonn's Dec. 9 column about the U.S. involvement in Somalia just reeked of hatred toward the U.S. administration. Her letter was littered with unfounded accusations and assumptions attacking every aspect of the U.S. involvement.

Unfortunately, in her ranting and ravings, she forgot to give us an alternate solution for saving the millions of starving people in Somalia. As the past has proven, swamping that nation with food and supplies alone does not work, so what should we do, just watch them all die?

It looks like in her blind attack on the administration Kelly forgot all her compassion for the scores of starving Somalis.

'Doors' is solely student effort

JENNIFER SHANK
Collegian

Seven K-State students who wouldn't take no for an answer are producing their own musical.

The production, "Doors," will be performed at 7 p.m. Saturday in the Purple Masque Theatre.

"Doors" is a musical revue for the 1990s that consists of songs from various other musicals, said Scott McLean, senior in journalism and theater.

McLean said K-State only does one musical a year, and the students wanted to do another one.

"The unique thing about our production is that it is all student-orientated, and no faculty is involved," he said.

McLean said it has been difficult putting "Doors" together. All of the cast members have been involved with other shows this semester, and it was hard to juggle the busy schedules.

"'Doors' has been a big commitment and has taken a lot of motivation and dedication," he said. "We are excited to finally perform it."

Mike Brennan, freshman in theater and musical director of the production, said the name "Doors" is very symbolic.

"Our musical is all about opening new doors for yourself whether it be in relationships, jobs or in life," Brennan said.

He said the songs are fairly current and are relevant to today's society.

"We want to to tie into the musical the fact that we all have problems and are trying to figure out who we are," he said.

Brennan said they have the support of the majority of the theater faculty.

"The faculty always wants us to get all the experience we can to better ourselves," he said.

Everyone involved with the production of "Doors" are proud of their accomplishment, Brennan said.

"Finding the resources to put a show together is pretty rare for a group of students," he said.

The production was financed only by the students involved. "Doors" features five singers and two musicians and is a free performance.

Rules combat 'vice'

public servants are working for them, not for special interests," Christopher said. "We believe it's time for a dramatic step to show we are serious about making government work."

How will the rules be enforced?

Christopher said federal officials could get injunctions against former officials who break the pledge or, equally important, sue to recover any income they earn from prohibited activities.

He said the rules were not extended to all 3,500 federal appointees because Clinton wanted to curb influence-peddling among top-level officials without putting unnecessary limits on what other workers can do when they leave government.

And he acknowledged the rules may scare off potential appointees wary of the limits on their post-government activities, calling that a fair price for eliminating a source of "vice" in government.

Christopher said the transition team was putting out the rules now because it wanted the guidelines clearly stated before the president-elect starts making appointments.

Clinton's first Cabinet selections are expected this week.

He added that so far, no one had turned down a job or removed himself or herself from consideration because of the rules, which had been widely anticipated.

After seizing the seaside airport and the harbor in uncontested landings at dawn, the Marines — spearheading a force of 28,000 U.S. troops — took up positions at three checkpoints leading into the city.

Three Marines entered the dented iron gates of the deserted U.S. Embassy and hoisted the flag on a wobbly pole.

In a diplomatic move, officials also raised U.S. flags on both sides of the Green Line separating the two warring clans in the capital.

Food began arriving almost immediately. For the first time in weeks, a World Food Program-chartered plane flew in 17 tons of a powdery mixture of sugar, beans, flour and vitamins for babies and malnourished people. It was quickly unloaded and taken to warehouses.

president who would run on the same ticket as the president. The bill requires a three-fourths majority vote to pass.

If it passes, the bill will be sent to the nine college councils, seven of which must approve it for it to be enacted.

McClaskey also said the proposed revision of funding regulations may be controversial.

The bill would require campus service groups and college councils to submit year-long budgets each spring to receive Senate allocations.

Non-service groups would be required to submit itemized budgets each semester.

Senate will also vote on a bill to create the Academic Career Information Center to help the increasing number of students who have undeclared majors, who want to change majors or who are academically displaced.

A proposed fee increase for KSDB-FM 91.9 will also be voted on. The bill would raise fees for full-time students from 85 to 95 cents per semester, and part-time fees from 50 to 55 cents. It would also increase the fee for summer students from 10 to 15 cents per credit hour, up to six hours.

suggested some student loans could be paid off through a few years of community service after graduation.

The incoming administration does have some different ideas about student aid programs, Moeder said.

"We're seeing an ever-increasing debt for a lot of students," he said.

"They're needing to borrow more and more to finance an education. I think some alternative forms of repayment are necessary."

Moeder said the association's goal is to improve accessibility to an education for all students.

"By being an officer in an association that has a strong impact on legislative changes, I see my position as a way to enhance the service here at K-State," he said.

The professional organization consists of education and lending institutions from eight Midwestern states.

Treasurer Don Siemsen said the organization will certainly benefit from Moeder being in office.

"He has strong leadership abilities and good organizational skills," he said.

Moeder began serving the one-year position in October.

Yurrita benefits from visit

Since then, the partners have formed 12 subcommittees on topics ranging from natural resources to international trade.

Geyer said both partners benefit from the exchange. Paraguayans receive information on skills and technology, and Kansans learn more about a rich culture.

"At least 100 people went to Paraguay last year," Geyer said.

Yurrita is in Kansas primarily to learn how to develop systems for environmental education, she said through interpreter Ricardo Garay, graduate student in curriculum and instruction.

"(Paraguayans) use their resources so poorly that the only way to combat it is to teach every kid you can get hold of about sound conservation practices," Geyer said.

Yurrita said her short-term goal is to bring environmental specialists from K-State to Paraguay to help disseminate information and to research environmental problems.

The major environmental concern in Paraguay is deforestation, she said. Deforestation causes a variety of problems, including loss of habitat, climate change, soil degradation and erosion.

Waste disposal is the biggest problem in urban areas of Paraguay, she said.

Yurrita will be meeting with biologists, environmental education experts, researchers on hazardous waste and Kansas journalists. She will also visit area zoos, recycling centers and museums.

She will leave for Washington, D.C., the national headquarters of Partners of the Americas, Friday.

Cone returns to Royals

ASSOCIATED PRESS

LOUISVILLE, Ky. — After six years in the bright lights of the big city, David Cone is returning to his Midwestern roots.

The 29-year-old right-hander and the Kansas City Royals agreed Tuesday to an $18 million, three-year contract that makes him the highest-paid pitcher in baseball.

Cone gets a record $9 million signing bonus, by far the largest ever, and salaries of $3 million per season. His $6 million annual average tops the previous high for a pitcher, $5,425,000 in the two-year deal signed last fall between Jack Morris and the Toronto.

"They made me an offer I couldn't refuse," he said.

The deal sent Cone, born and raised in Kansas City, back to the team where he started his pro career. Ever since they sent Cone, then a young, struggling reliever, to the New York Mets on March 28, 1987, for four minor leaguers, the Royals had wanted to get him again.

"Obviously, he was part of a trade we shouldn't have made a few years ago," Royals general manager Herk Robinson said.

Since that dreadful deal, Cone has gone on to become one of the best pitchers in baseball. He went 20-3 with a 2.22 ERA for the Mets in 1988, and last year led the majors with 261 strikeouts while with the Mets and Toronto.

Cone, 29, is 84-51 lifetime with a 3.01 ERA. He has averaged nearly a strikeout per inning since 1986.

The World Series champion Blue Jays, who got Cone from the Mets last August, were one of four teams courting Cone, including the New York Yankees.

"Kansas City was my first choice," he said.

"I know a lot was written about how I'd like to play in New York," he said. "The Yankee negotiations were rather strange, needless to say. I think the chaos surrounding the front office there is self-explanatory."

The Yankees had said they wanted to sign a top-line starter, but concentrated on National League Cy Young winner Greg Maddux. They did not actively pursue Cone.

The Royals, meanwhile, knew what they wanted.

"David was our No. 1 priority in pitching," Kansas City manager Hal McRae said. "He gives us innings, a good competitor, a complete game guy."

Cone gave the Mets several good years, becoming a full-time starter in 1987 and never having a losing season.

In late August, however, the Mets decided they would not be able — or willing — to pay what it would cost them to keep Cone, so they traded him to Toronto for second baseman Jeff Kent and center fielder Ryan Thompson.

Cone was 13-7 with a 2.88 ERA for the Mets before the trade. He went 4-3 with a 2.55 ERA for Toronto.

Along with Cone, the Royals signed two other free agents. They lured shortstop Greg Gagne from Minnesota and kept infielder Curtis Wilkerson.

Gagne, one of the best fielding shortstops in baseball, signed a three-year, $10.7 million contract.

Gagne was signed a few weeks after the Royals acquired Gold Glove second baseman Jose Lind from Pittsburgh.

"We made a lot of errors last year. We wanted to address a lot of needs at the winter meetings, and defense was one of them," Royals manager Hal McRae said. "We needed someone to catch the ball."

Kansas City split shortstop last season between young David Howard and Wilkerson.

"Nothing against David, but he's not the player that Gagne is," McRae said.

Gagne put together a 53-game errorless streak last year for Minnesota. He had a .973 fielding percentage and 18 errors.

Gagne, 31, anchored the Twins' infield during World Series championship seasons in 1987 and 1991.

Gagne hit .246 with seven home runs and 39 RBIs last season. He is a .249 career hitter in 10 years.

Baseball's spending spree

Braves sign Maddux for $28 million in latest example of free-for-all

ASSOCIATED PRESS

LOUISVILLE, Ky. — A day after spending a single-day record of $125 million on 16 players, major-league teams gave $72.75 million to seven free agents.

Greg Maddux got Wednesday's big deal: a $28-million, five-year contract from the Atlanta Braves.

Maddux, the top pitcher available this offseason, turned down an offer from the New York Yankees worth at least $6 million more. He joined David Cone, Doug Drabek and Jose Guzman on the list of pitchers who spurned the Yankees' big bucks in recent weeks.

On a day that would have seemed busy had it not come after Tuesday's record spending spree, outfielder Andre Dawson, rejected by the Chicago Cubs, agreed to a $9.3-million, two-year deal with the Boston Red Sox.

Pitcher Mike Moore, offered only a two-year deal from the Oakland A's, agreed with the Detroit Tigers on a three-year contract worth $10 million.

Reliever Randy Myers, a free agent after just one season in San Diego, agreed to an $11-million, three-year contract with the Chicago Cubs. Todd Worrell, a reliever for the St. Louis Cardinals since 1985, went to the Los Angeles Dodgers for $9.5 million over three years.

In other activity, the Montreal Expos sent pitcher Mark Gardner and pitcher Doug Piatt to Kansas City for catcher Tim Spehr and pitcher Jeff Shaw.

Maddux, 26, joins a staff that already includes Tom Glavine, Steve Avery, John Smoltz and Pete Smith. Charlie Leibrandt was traded to the Texas Rangers. The Braves went 98-64 while coming within a game of a World Series title for the second straight year, and they had a team ERA of 3.14.

Braves general manager John Schuerholz said this "provides the Atlanta Braves with the most formidable starting rotation in all of baseball."

Maddux gets a $2.5-million signing bonus, $5 million in 1993, $3.5 million in 1994, $5 million in 1995 and $6 million each in 1996 and 1997. He was 20-11 for the Chicago Cubs in 1992 and won the NL Cy Young Award.

Dawson, a popular 38-year-old outfielder for the Cubs since 1987, wanted to stay at Wrigley Field but wanted more than a one-year deal, all the Cubs were willing to offer.

Boston got him for a $350,000 signing bonus, $4.7 million in 1993 and $4.25 million in 1994.

"Being realistic, I know the move to the American League will be advantageous for me," said Dawson, a .282 career hitter with 399 homers and 1,425 RBI.

"There will be a point in time when I need a day off and I can DH. But right now, I think I'm targeted to play right field."

Boston didn't offer salary arbitration to its right fielder last season, Tom Brunansky.

Moore, a 33-year-old right-hander, was offered a two-year contract by Oakland. But the A's withdrew it Wednesday morning, and he accepted a $1-million signing bonus from Detroit along with yearly salaries of $3 million.

"It felt good to be wanted," Moore said. "I know they got short fences, but they score a lot of runs."

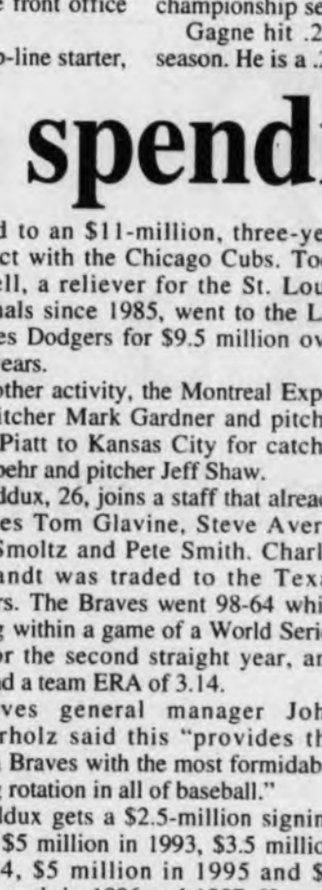
Worrell, a 33-year-old right-hander, rebounded to pitch in 67 games for the Cardinals last season. He hadn't pitched in the majors since 1989 because of elbow problems.

"We feel he's the right guy for us," Dodgers general manager Fred Claire said. "Along with Roger McDowell and Jim Gott, he gives us depth in the late innings."

Worrell got a $1.25-million signing bonus, salaries $2 million a season in 1993 and 1994, and $4.25 million in 1995.

Myers got a $1-million signing bonus from the Cubs along with salaries of $3.25 million in 1993 and 1994, and $3.5 million in 1995.

In other baseball news, the Red Sox also signed big-name free agent Tom Henke.



Henke, 35 on Dec. 21, was 3-2 with 34 saves and a 2.26 ERA for the Toronto Blue Jays in 1992. He has 220 saves in 11 major league seasons.

He has been one of baseball's most dominant and consistent stoppers. He has struck out 695 batters in 623 innings.

▶JAYHAWKS' OSTERTAG COULD MISS 4 WEEKS

LAWRENCE (AP)— University of Kansas reserve center Greg Ostertag will miss up to four weeks with a stress fracture in his leg, officials announced.

Ostertag, a 7-foot-2 sophomore, underwent surgery on his right tibia Wednesday.

Ostertag was averaging six points and 4.7 rebounds per game for No. 2 Kansas.

His injury further depletes a Jayhawks front line that was already without 6-foot-8 sophomore Ben Davis, who left the team.

▶HARBAUGH TO SACRIFICE CASH FOR LOSSES

LAKE FOREST, Ill. (AP) — Quarterback Jim Harbaugh is signing over his paycheck to charity until the Chicago Bears break their losing streak.

The Bears have lost six games in a row, and Harbaugh is to start Sunday against the Pittsburgh Steelers after sitting out the last two games.

"I'll refuse to take a paycheck until we win," Harbaugh said Wednesday. "I'm giving it to charity until we win again."

Harbaugh is making about $1.2 million.

▶GARTH TO SING ANTHEM AT SUPER BOWL

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Garth Brooks will join a distinguished line of entertainers who have "kicked off" Super Bowl games.

Brooks was named to sing the national anthem at the Super Bowl on Jan. 31 in the Rose Bowl at Pasadena.

Among the others who have performed the national anthem at the NFL's championship game are Diana Ross, Barry Manilow, Wynton Marsalis, Neil Diamond, Billy Joel, Aaron Neville, Whitney Houston and Harry Connick Jr.

Lady Cats shoot for 4th win

BRIAN ANDERSON
Collegian

If history repeats itself, the Lady Cats will remain undefeated after its game tonight at 7:30 in Bramlage Coliseum against Oral Roberts.

K-State, 3-0, after beating Lafayette Saturday 48-41, has won all four games in Manhattan against the Lady Titans, including last year's 66-64 victory.

"It was a good game," Coach Susan Yow said of their last meeting. "We played a solid 25-30 minutes, but we lost some concentration in the game."

K-State led at halftime 39-28 before the Lady Titans fought back.

Oral Roberts went on a 15-3 run in a five-minute stretch to take the lead in the last couple of minutes of the game.

Leah Honeycutt tied the score with one minute left, and then-guard Mary Jo Miller gave K-State the winning basket with 23 seconds left in the game.

Another area where the Lady Cats lost concentration was at the free throw line, where K-State was 1-for-17.

"We need to be concerned with Oral Roberts," Yow said of the 1-2 Lady Titans. "But we need to improve on the offensive floor. We need to make better judgments and decisions and not lose any defensive execution.

"We need to find some chemistry on the offense. It's the one area we are lacking in."

K-State has committed 72 turnovers in the first three games, including 35 against Lafayette.

The Lady Titans played a zone defense in the last year's game. This allowed K-State to shoot four-for-eight from behind the arch, including three 3-pointers from Kelly Moylan. Yow said she expects a different defense tonight.

"I don't think they'll play a zone defense," she said. " If we run our man-to-man offense well, it can open up the perimeter."

Oral Roberts won its last game 85-59 against Texas-Pan American. The Lady Titans lost to Northwestern State (61-94) and to Lamar (75-84) to start the season.

The team from Tulsa, Okla., returns two starters from last year's 6-22 squad. Forward Sylvia Cummings leads Oral Roberts in scoring and rebounding, averaging 14 points and 12 rebounds a game. Two other seniors, Paige White and Helen Garrett, are averaging 14 and 11.3 points per game, respectively.

"Cummings plays her back to the basket, so we have to get in front of her," K-State assistant coach Sue Doran said. "Garrett is physical and aggressive inside. White can hit from the perimeter, including the 3-pointer."

YOU'RE ASKING ME?

by Cassandra Duveaux

Boyfriend a good candidate for professional help

DEAR CASSANDRA,

I have a problem. This guy I've been dating has got me totally confused. To give you some background on him, his parents divorced when he was 5 years old, and he lost his father, stepmother and stepsister when he was 17 years old. When his mother re-married, her husband was constantly verbally abusive to her. As a result, this guy and my boyfriend do not get along.

Because of his past, he's afraid of getting close to anyone, with good reason as you can see. In the past, he has run quite wild, drinking and partying a lot and dating many girls. He's never really had a steady girlfriend. So, this is all new to him. But I'm scared also — who isn't? But if you never take that chance, you will never know, right?

He says he loves me but is not used to being "tied down." So, he often gets mad or frustrated, and in turn takes it out on me, whether it be little comments here and there, or acting differently when he's around me. I do love him and want to be with him, but how supportive and for how long do I have to be?

Frustrated

DEAR FRUSTRATED.,

Your boyfriend sounds like a good candidate for professional help. I think he is having trouble dealing with the loss of his father and family, as well as adjusting to his mother's new husband. These kinds of emotions are difficult for young men to deal with and express sometimes. How long and how supportive? As long as he is not abusive to you, use your head and just follow your heart.

DEAR CASSANDRA,

I have had a serious boyfriend for two years. I love my boyfriend a lot, but I've got a big problem. He has a best friend that spends a lot of time with us, mainly because he has a hard time interacting with other girls.

Recently, my boyfriend asked me to have sex with his best friend. He feels it is the best answer to his friend's problem with other girls.

There is one more catch to my problem. Even though my boyfriend wants me to do this, he also wants to watch to make sure I don't enjoy it more with his best friend than I do with him. I love my boyfriend so much and would do anything for him, but is having sex with his best friend going too far? Waiting patiently for a quick response.

Love Triangle

DEAR LOVE TRIANGLE,

Honey, I think your boyfriend has lost his swizzle stick. He is not only going too far, he is gone. Ditch him.

Royals plan separate life

Gloucestershire and stay with his 92-year-old grandmother, the Queen Mother, at Clarence House when in London.

Prince William, 10, and Prince Henry, 8, will divide their Christmas holidays between their parents, the palace indicated.

Such a separation for the heir is unprecedented in this century.

Last century, Queen Victoria's son, Edward VII, had a series of extramarital relationships despite a congenial marriage to Queen Alexandra. But the couple remained together until his death in 1910.

The palace statement said nothing about the cause for separation. But in response to questions, the Buckingham Palace press office issued its own statement saying "there have been no third parties involved on either side in this decision; they would strongly deprecate any such suggestion."

Prime Minister John Major told the House of Commons there was no reason why Diana could not be crowned queen — assuming the couple stays married and Charles, 44, lives long enough to succeed his 66-year-old mother, Queen Elizabeth II.

A divorce would not prevent Charles from taking the throne, but if Diana were no longer his wife, she could not be crowned queen.

Ultralites boost awareness was performed by Kiki Lovelace, freshman in arts and sciences; Jonita Woodson, freshman in psychology; and Jennifer Zabel, freshman in business.

Zabel, Smith and Tamiko Montgomery, freshman in business, performed "Turn It Up," a type of jazz dance.

Lovelace and Woodson performed an African Heritage dance.

To close the speak-out, Smith and Tara Girard, freshman in preoccupational therapy, performed ballet.

Montgomery said the speak-out raised awareness of the team.

She said now it needs more support.

"I just hope there will be more students aware of the multicultural organizations that we have now," Woodson said.

Several students in the Union said it is important that the team pursue awareness with events like this.

"They are becoming more recognized, and the speak-out was an important first step for the team," said one student in support of the team.

"Any new group is going to have a difficult time getting started, and it takes someone to knock down that first wall."

Troops shoot 2 to death

ASSOCIATED PRESS

MOGADISHU, Somalia — Troops opened fire on a truckload of Somalis who barreled through a French checkpoint Thursday night, killing two and injuring seven in the first bloodshed of the U.S.-led mission in Somalia.

The shooting came nearly two days after American and French soldiers took control of Somalia's capital to protect food shipments. The two main Somali warlords, whose looting clansmen have blocked the convoys, agreed Thursday to their first meeting since they began fighting two years ago.

The shooting episode foreshadowed the unpredictable situation U.S. troops may face in Somalia's interior. Saturday, Marines are to escort the first land convoy in a month to strife-torn Baidoa, 125 miles to the northwest.

CARE International said Thursday night its five-member staff in Baidoa had barricaded themselves inside their compound in anticipation of an armed attack by clansmen. The staff were an American, two Britons and two Australians.

CARE's manager in Mogadishu, Rhodri Wynn-Pope, asked American troops to provide air cover for the town Thursday night.

COLLEGE OF ENGINEERING

Students question spending

Technology group wants more information about fee allocation

LANA SCHRATER
Collegian

Members of Kansas State Engineering Technologists have questioned the engineering technology department on how student fee money is being spent.

In Fall 1991, the student engineering fee was implemented for the department to purchase equipment for student use.

Since engineering technology will be moving to K-State-Salina in May 1994, the department wanted to have total say in where the money was spent, said Ryan Hampl, KSET member and junior in mechanical engineering technology.

More than one month ago, KSET president Russ Revey, junior in engineering technology, said on behalf of the group he asked the department for information on its activity, including a list of where student fees were being spent.

"The list that said where all the money was being spent wasn't too descriptive, so we asked the department head, (John) Ulrich, to fill in the blanks," Revey said.

"He followed up with that for us and prepared a revised list. Then the feeling at the KSET meeting was that some of the money was not being spent fairly."

At the Dec. 3 KSET meeting, students talked about why student fee money was being spent on the Department of Energy lab. The K-State lab is one of 12 electric vehicle operator sites, Ulrich said.

The program is partially funded by a grant from the Department of Energy that is matched by the University and the utility companies, he said.

"Two students work in the DOE lab,

▶PLANE CRASH KILLS ECUADORAN GENERAL

QUITO, Ecuador (AP) — The army's top general, his son and eight military officers were killed Thursday when their private jet clipped a 10-story building under construction and crashed in a residential area, officials said.

There were no survivors aboard, and at least one worker in the building was killed, officials said. Radio reports, which could not be immediately confirmed, said at least three were dead on the ground.

Exploration pays off

Marshall Scholarship is 'life-changing' chance for senior

LANE ALLISON
Collegian

Cynthia Riemann had the demeanor of a bottle of champagne that has been shaken too much.

The effervescent smile on her face was a testimonial to a great honor — the senior in industrial engineering and physical science is K-State's newest Marshall Scholar.

President Jon Wefald said the award is one of the most distinguished and prestigious scholarships offered.

"I think everybody at K-State is delighted and overjoyed with Cynthia's award. You have to call it a monumental achievement, and it proves that K-State is among the elite for student scholars," Wefald said.

The Marshall Scholarship provides for two or three years of all-expense-paid graduate study at any university in the United Kingdom.

Riemann said this is the most life-changing honor she has achieved.

"I was nominated last spring by K-State for both the Marshall and the Rhodes scholarships," Riemann said. "I instantly withdrew from the Rhodes. I think the Marshall is the more prestigious of the two, even though fewer people have heard of it."

Riemann said she spent most of last summer contacting British universities for information and writing 10 drafts of a personal statement to be sent to the selection committee.

She said one of the toughest parts was waiting for the phone call after the interview.

She said she was in the office of Nancy Twiss, special assistant to the provost for scholarship development, when she heard the message on her home answering machine.

"I knew that I would find out the results on Nov. 20," she said. "I couldn't

Clinton names treasury secretary

Lloyd Bentsen appointed as 1st member of Cabinet

ASSOCIATED PRESS

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. — President-elect Clinton began building his new administration Thursday by selecting Texas Sen. Lloyd Bentsen for treasury secretary.

He chose a cadre of other experienced hands from Wall Street and Congress for remaining top economic jobs.

Announcing his first Cabinet selections 37 days after his election, Clinton said to stay tuned for more important appointments, with his health, housing and environmental picks, which could come this week.

Propelled into office on a pledge to restore the nation's economic vitality, Clinton promised to work his heart out with his new economic team. He announced five appointments in all, selecting faces familiar to the Washington scene and reassuring to the business community.

Besides Bentsen, who is chairman of the Senate Finance Committee, they are:

■ Rep. Leon Panetta, chairman of the House Budget Committee, who will be director of Office of Management and Budget.

■ Robert Rubin, co-chairman of Goldman, Sachs & Co., to be assistant to the president for

Senate passes Bramlage fee

KIM MCNITT
Collegian

Student senators breathed a sigh of relief as the Bramlage Continuance Fee issue was finally settled during last night's Senate meeting.

The bill was approved in a 44-6 vote after three weeks of controversy. The fee, $1 for full-time students and 50 cents for part-time students, will be used for maintenance of the coliseum.

A motion was made to reconsider the bill immediately after it was defeated Nov. 20. It was later tabled due to controversy over parliamentary procedures.

Student Tribunal ruled, in this case, that reconsideration was in order, and the bill easily surpassed the needed two-third majority vote. However, tribunal will be setting definite guidelines concerning the reconsideration of bills next spring.

Student Governing Association also passed on a 40-1 vote with one abstention.

The new policy will result in changes for many campus groups. A conference committee will be established and will consist of three members appointed by Senate's finance

Breaking ground for farmers

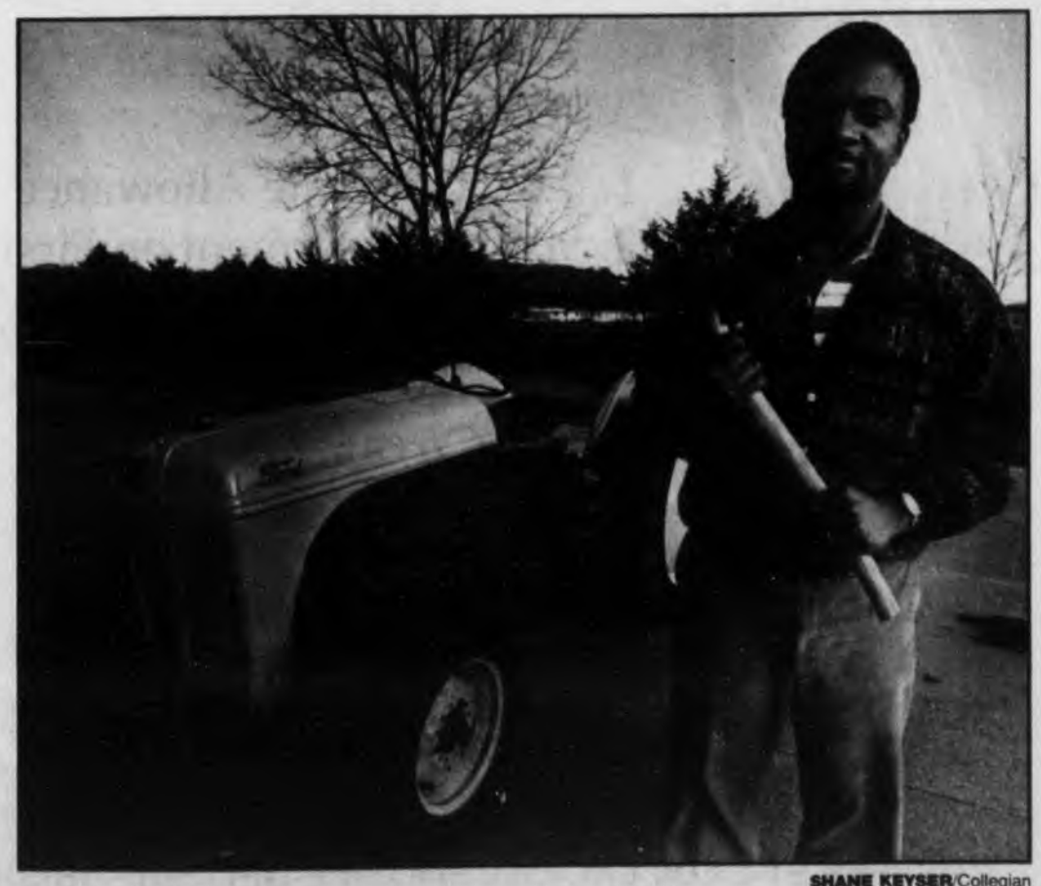
Nigerian native strives to aid homeland's famine

LANE ALLISON
Collegian

Most students at K-State look forward to the holiday season as a chance to relax. They look forward to visiting friends and big meals with relatives.



But many people in Nigeria and the rest of Africa are not able to afford the luxury of a holiday season. Their holiday will be spent like all days, in primitive backbreaking farm labor to feed their families.

Chris Akhimien, a Nigerian native, can attest to this first hand. He's a big man with the dream of bringing the farming practices of his homeland into the 20th century.

Akhimien is the founder of Tractors For Our Daily Bread. Operating out of a small office on the west side of Manhattan, he has been working for the past few years on providing small, easy-to-use and reliable tractors to the farmers of Nigeria.

He said more than two million infants die each year in Africa because of hunger and Many campus facilities will have adjusted hours during the December holiday season.

Teto Henderson, Union Station manager, said Union Station will open at noon Dec. 12 and remain open 24 hours a day until 2 p.m. Dec. 18.

"This is the third semester we've done this," Henderson said. "We've had a lot of positive feedback, and it's a tradition that will probably keep going."

The K-State Union Bookstore will open each morning of finals week at 7:15 and close at 8 p.m. until Thursday. It will close at 5 p.m. Dec. 18.

The Copy Center will open at 7:45 a.m. and close at 9 p.m. each night except Friday, when it will close at 5 p.m.

Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex will be open from 8 a.m. to 10:30 p.m. all week but will stay open until 11 p.m. Friday.

The K-State Union general building, including the Stateroom, will be open from 7 a.m. to midnight Monday to Thursday but will close early Friday.

Farrell Library will maintain its regular hours of 7:30 a.m. to midnight Monday through Thursday, but it will close at 6 p.m. Friday.

For students literally sick of finals, Lafene Health Center will keep its regular hours. It will be open from 8 a.m. to 11:30 a.m. and 1 to 4:30 p.m.

Most computer labs will be open during regular hours.

Business department labs will be open in Calvin all week until 5 p.m. Friday. They will open again for student use on the first day of spring classes.

According to the Computing Center, all services will continue to operate normal hours, including labs in Seaton, Justin and Fairchild Halls.

The journalism lab in Kedzie Hall will not be open during finals week.

Yeltsin wants referendum to decide rule

ASSOCIATED PRESS

MOSCOW — President Boris Yeltsin declared Thursday he could no longer work with Russia's hard-line lawmakers.

He proposed a nationwide referendum to decide whether he or Congress should run the nation.

Frustrated by the rejection of his reformist prime minister a day earlier by the Congress of People's Deputies, Yeltsin accused legislators of trying start a "creeping coup" to send the country "on the road to nowhere."

In a campaign to bypass the Congress and appeal directly to the people, Yeltsin proposed a Jan. 24 referendum on whether there should be new presidential or parliamentary elections in the spring.

The Congress shot back by rejecting Yeltsin's action as confrontational, saying any referendum should ask whether early elections should be held for both the president and the Congress, Russia's highest parliamentary body.

Returning to the populist tactics that carried him to the peak of power, the 61-year-old president left the Grand Kremlin Palace in the afternoon and plunged into a crowd of workers on the grease-covered assembly lines of an auto plant in southeastern Moscow.

During a blunt, bitter speech when the Congress convened earlier in the day, Yeltsin accused lawmakers of blocking his economic reforms and of trying to revive "the totalitarian Soviet-Communist system."

"What they failed to do in August 1991 they decided to repeat now and carry out a creeping coup," Yeltsin said. Lawmakers responded with jeers.

Yeltsin's term expires in June 1996. Elections for Congress are scheduled for March 1995.

Recent public opinion surveys show Yeltsin far more popular than the Congress.

DAN GRAFEL
Collegian

Manhattan High School averages one or two fights a week.

"Generally, those are between willing participants," Principal Jim Rezac said.

"Our primary responsibility, after the safety of the kids, is to guarantee an educational environment where kids can learn," he said. "We do everything we can to maintain that environment."

He said the school uses several deterrents, such as hall and cafeteria monitors. Two security officers are on duty during school hours.

"We ask faculty to be vigilant and aware of any kind of disciplinary problem inside or outside the classroom," he said.

The school offers counseling to avoid conflicts, but if a conflict occurs, the school tries to deal with it decisively, he said.

Any student the administration believes had a major role in a fight is suspended usually for five days, Rezac said.

However, one parent said she believes those safeguards aren't enough.

Donna Fox said her son was repeatedly a victim of violence and intimidation at MHS, and she doesn't believe the school is a safe place at all.

"Since our experience with our son, we've had numerous people tell us about their youth being intimidated or threatened by individuals at the high school," she said.

School board president Joleen Hill said she doesn't think MHS had any more problems with violence than should be expected from a school of 1,800 students.

"The policy of the board is to

MUSIC

Renaissance sounds to fill All Faiths Chapel

SHEDERA BAUSCH
Collegian

The KSU Collegium Musicum will perform Renaissance music, both vocally and instrumentally, Saturday at All Faiths Chapel.

Group director Sara Funkhouser said it derives from a class offered on campus.

According to Funkhouser, a number of students, faculty and people from the community make up the 35 member group.

Susan Dame, senior in music, has been performing with the group for two years.

"It's fun to be in, and you meet a lot of different people," Dame said.

Dame said the group will not play as much holiday music as in previous years. Instead, they will concentrate on sacred music from the Renaissance era.

Dame, who usually played the krummhorn in previous productions, said the performance will be played on recorders.

"We listen to the music in class, but it is more fun to play it than listen to it," Dame said.

The ensemble has proved to be more than just a class for Dame.

"The group helped me improve my music reading skills," she said.

Not everyone is as lucky as us

Today is the last day of the Collegian for this semester. Finals week is around the corner and the big Christmas feast is just about here.

People get in a Santa Claus mood, looking forward to a happy break with a richly filled food basket on their table.

People in Somalia are starving to death. Yugoslavia is still in the middle of a civil war.

The population of those countries, and the other states around the world in which there is everything but peace, do not have a long wish list for Santa. Christmas does not exist for them anymore.

All they want is to live a normal life again. It is that simple.

But you don't have to go overseas to find unhappy people.

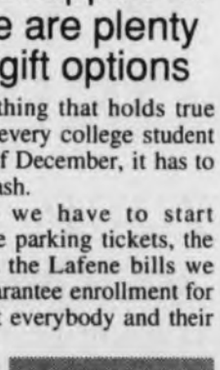
In the United States, hundred of thousands are homeless and won't have a nice, warm Christmas Eve under a lightened tree.

You probably can't do a lot about that, but at least you should be aware of the fact that there are people who can't enjoy a harmonious celebration.

Organizations such as UNICEF and the Red Cross are accepting donations all year long to provide help to those who need it.

When you are sitting at the table for Christmas dinner, think about them and include them in your prayers.

Have a Merry Christmas.



Good gifts only require imagination

For a couple of quarters, you could make somebody very happy.

If you're strapped for cash, there are plenty of holiday gift options

If there's one thing that holds true for just about every college student in the month of December, it has to be a shortage of cash.

Not only do we have to start thinking about the parking tickets, the library fines, and the Lafene bills we need to pay to guarantee enrollment for next semester, but everybody and their dog also expects a present once Christmas rolls around.

DAVID FILIPPI

What's more, we all know college kids aren't financial wizards waiting for their shot on Wall Street.

Even though the folks back home have sent enough money to rescue General Motors from bankruptcy, we're still digging in the seat cushions at the K-State Union to come up with enough change to buy some Ramen noodles from Food-4-Less.

With your Wildcat Card maxed out, credit agencies on your tail and roommates who inevitably stick you with the bills, I've decided to give you a hand in your Christmas shopping endeavors.

Thus, here are a few gift-giving ideas for the financially strapped college student still wanting to impress family and friends with the holiday spirit.

To begin with, my personal favorite is a small house plant. For $2 or $3, you can buy that special person something that's alive and growing.

Maybe it says something about your relationship, or maybe you're making a statement in the fight against the greenhouse effect. Either way, it's cheap.

If you're really low on legal tender, may I suggest coupons? Get yourself a couple of newspapers, and before you know it, you could be saving somebody 20 or 30 bucks on purchases you know they'll be making.

Whether it's laundry detergent, household supplies or just food items, everybody needs this stuff. For a couple of quarters, you could make somebody very happy.

I have to admit that I'm also a fan of goldfish. Adaptable to just about any sort of container, goldfish can be purchased for as little as six for $1.

As a general rule, fish are easy to manage. You feed them once a day and change their water twice a month. They're relaxing, and, unlike other pets, they're quiet.

If you're looking for a little something to give an out-of-state friend or relative, how about a "Home on the Range" paperweight?

For the price of traveling to Tuttle Creek Reservoir or the Konza Prairie, you might run across an authentic Kansas rock, useful for keeping papers from blowing out of place.

On a more serious note, crafts are always a big hit as Christmas presents. You could turn modeling clay into superhero figurines, sea shells into necklaces, or pine cones into Christmas-tree ornaments.

This stuff is usually cheap and available at any craft store.

Used books from the Dusty Bookshelf make great, inexpensive gifts. Many of the early 20th-century classics were published for under a dollar, and you pay only one-half of the cover price.

Most anything from a secondhand thrift store can make a great gift, even if it's only a gag gift. There's no telling what you can find.

Finally, I'd like to put in a good word for food items. If you can follow a recipe, and you have access to an oven, cornbread muffins are tasty, and they're less than 50 cents for a box mix.

If cooking isn't your forte, design your own fruit basket. A simple basket filled with bananas, apples and oranges is cheap, creative. And, by golly, it's healthy, too.

Sure, maybe I'm just a stingy gift-giver. Call me heartless.

Then again, for anybody who is experiencing the college cash crunch, it doesn't have to be expensive to be expressive of the Christmas spirit.

"Satan's playpen" is lacking any morals

Editor,

I don't get it! I just don't get it. Does this institution have some formal statement of purpose I haven't heard? Does it read, "Under the disguise as an educational institution, the public university's purpose is to discourage, publicly mock, offend, disgust and betray every moral fiber in each and every Christian? The goal is to teach the exact opposite of the Bible and to offend the 'so-called' God in every way possible"?

When I first heard of some friends talking about K-State, they named it "Satan's playpen." I laughed at this ridiculous remark, but now I know that it is true. First semester, I received many F's on papers I did from a comp teacher who loved to rip apart my religious arguments. Second semester, the same class but different teacher gave me A's and stated that he did not agree with me, but enjoyed the challenge.

I am not a paranoid freak, but let's look at the facts here. Did my writing skills go from A-level to F-level over the summer? I think not. This is just one of the many examples of the problems I have run into here because of my faith.

The issue that has caused me to write, shake with anger and seriously consider withdrawing from this institution of wretched "teaching" was the advertisement in the Dec. 8 Collegian for an X-rated movie at the Union. Great! My education and tax money is going to sponsor the degradation of sexuality. I am helping these "actors" prostitute themselves.

I hate pornography and do not understand why it is in our beloved country. Does it have any remote trace of educational value? Will it further the positive expansion of our thinking skills and intelligence?

Get real. All this movie will do is make a bunch of people massively horny, and I don't understand why I have to be a part of it. If so many people are dying to get off on voyeurism like Pee-wee Herman, let the University have no part of it. Why stoop so low, K-State?

Sex is beautiful, thrilling, private, intimate and holy when it is in the marriage bed. When it is on screen, it is sickening. As a feminist and Christian, why do I have to play a part? What good is this?

▶ ORTHODOX STUFF

Objectivity requires careful examination

Editor,

While claiming to advocate a free and open investigation of the truth, John Hart in his column on Dec. 7 once again misrepresents the position he is trying to indicate.

Harald Prins' column does not propose a wholesale rejection of the orthodox in favor of something unorthodox. Prins wants the university to be a place where accepted beliefs are challenged — not for the sake of the challenge, but to determine the truth.

The practice of examining competing ideas, regardless of the implications for more conventional beliefs, is in fact a time-honored tradition. Descartes began with the assumption that nothing exists in order to reach his famous axiom "I think, therefore I am."

Justice Oliver Wendell Holmes noted that "the best test of truth is the power of the thought to get itself accepted in the competition of the market" of ideas.

The most interesting part of Mr. Hart's critique is that he admits that he "has as much to learn as anyone else." How is one to learn if he or she does not examine the orthodox and the unorthodox, giving both equal consideration until some objective conclusion is reached?

By embracing the orthodox because it is orthodox, Hart is himself guilty of "rejecting an entire body of ideas without first thinking about them."

Also, I am sick and tired of hearing about this "liberal campus." One would be hard-pressed to find a hotbed of liberalism anywhere in the state, including this campus. The fact that the University does conform to some of Mr. Prins' expectations does not mean that this is a liberal campus.

I sincerely hope conservative columnists on the Collegian can find something better to do than whine about the liberal press, the liberal campuses, the liberal cultural elite and those evil women and cultural minorities who keep trying to be recognized as equals in this "democratic society."

▶ RECYCLING

K-State ripe for good cleanup program

Editor,

I want to express my concern about the environment with the K-State campus. I find it discouraging that the University does not mandate some type of recycling. I feel that the University should encourage the recycling of aluminum, glass and paper. There is a numerous amount of trash being tossed out that could be recycled. Some type of attention is needed.

I encourage the administration and student government to do more than what is being done. This includes mandating or offering incentives for above-average recycling to groups, clubs and organizations throughout campus.

COMMENTARY

Now ask: How about a little intellectual surfing?

When this column originally ran on Dec. 1, certain parts were ommitted that altered the intended meaning. It is being run again as it was originally written with the intent of restoring Harald Prins' ideas. Again, the Collegian regrets the error.

This essay is about surfing, but has nothing to do with water. While I am aware that ocean surfing is hardly an option for those of us ensconced in the rolling grasslands of the Midwest, we do have the opportunity to do some intellectual surfing — to ride the waves of wisdom.

The idea of intellectual surfing is important, because it touches on the essence of university life. Or, perhaps I should say, what I believe a university should be all about.

For me, coming from the Netherlands, traditionally a seafaring nation, such maritime metaphors are common. As a Dutchman, I am a foreigner here at K-State. Like others from "away," I cannot help but notice the rather remarkable homogeneity here on this beautiful campus.

Nicely tucked away in the Flint Hills, it feels like a sheltered place. Here, unlike elsewhere in much of the United States, one finds little evidence of this country as a multicultural society.

This is probably why such issues as "multiculturalism," which is now quite literally a burning issue on many American campuses, is here mostly viewed as outlandish, perhaps quaint and easily dismissed as irrelevant. I find this short-sighted. But that's another matter.

Here, I am concerned with a less-fashionable issue. Actually, I believe there is a much more pernicious problem confronting the academic community. I call it the tyranny of orthodoxy.

In the final analysis, this is more of a threat to the well-being of the university as an institution than the attrition caused by more obvious factors such as slashed budgets, layoffs, salary freezes, tuition increases, library cutbacks or overcrowded classrooms.

From its foundations as an institution, the university has functioned as an intellectual center for the conversation, dissemination and advancement of higher learning. It has always been a place where orthodox, or customary, ideas and established doctrines have been challenged — a precious oasis in society where students were encouraged to explore the unknown. To master new skills. And perhaps most importantly, to think for themselves.

They are havens of originality and diversity, attracting free thinkers and, indeed, foreigners. Thus, universities occupy a somewhat precarious position within the conventions of wider society.

In this respect, K-State is not fundamentally different. Here, as elsewhere, most academic scholars have received their training as researchers and teachers at universities other than where they are currently employed. As a result, they often carry with them the ideas, patterns of thinking, research habits and teaching styles they picked up along their intellectual journeys.

WHAT DO YOU THINK?

At K-State, students take classes from professors from all over the world: Panama, India, Switzerland, Iran, Germany, Paraguay, France, China, England, Mexico and so on, including several scholars from my own corner of the world.

Of course, this diversity also exists, to a degree, among the students. While it is true that the vast majority of students call this prairie state their home, there are many from places as far as Japan, Ivory Coast, Spain and Argentina.

Often it is difficult to see if a professor or student is a foreigner. That is, until they begin to speak. Then suddenly, there is a different accent. Their language, while it is English, sounds unfamiliar and can be difficult to understand. After a while, though, one tends to get used to it, and it sounds less strange.

In a way, one could say the same about knowledge and ideas, which are the real stuff of university life. When first exposed to unfamiliar facts and theories, we may find them strange, alien or foreign. But we cannot reject them simply because we are unfamiliar with them.

Quite the contrary, students come to the university precisely because it is the place where they can expand the frontiers of their knowledge.

Of course, in today's world where everything, including institutions of higher learning, are geared to respond to the demands of the market place, there are some universities which simply function as diploma mills. They peddle worthless university degrees, including useless doctorates. But, I would also think that the university is more than a place where one goes to learn a trade to capitalize on in the market place.

In other words, as an institution made up of faculty and students, it should aspire beyond being a training center for future professionals.

No doubt, listening to the familiar is often easier, holding onto established customs more comfortable and adhering to old beliefs more assuring. But in our rapidly changing world, we are constantly looking at uncharted territories beyond yesterday's horizon.

The major function of the university is to create and preserve an intellectual climate in which people are encouraged to think for themselves, to challenge the usual beliefs and established doctrines.

Only then will it be possible for a society to effectively face the challenges of the future, to foster a generation eager to explore the new and to enable students to successfully cope with the unexpected in our constantly changing universe.

Only then can students gain the perspective needed to determine what from the past is worthy of being carried into the future.

This is why the university as a whole should promote diversity, reject orthodoxy, stimulate dialogue and emphasize creative thinking. As an institution (and therefore in a somewhat disciplined manner), it should not be afraid of a little chaos and anarchy — of waves.

And that brings us back to the idea of intellectual surfing and the university's role in making waves and showing us how to ride them gracefully and effectively. Without waves there is no dynamic movement to carry us forward — only aimless floating on the surface.

77-44 victory gives K-State women best start, 4-0, in 6 years

BRIAN ANDERSON
Collegian

Senior Kelly Moylan scored a career-high 21 points to boost the Lady Cats to their best start in six years as K-State beat Oral Roberts 77-44 Tuesday night at Bramlage Coliseum.

The Lady Cats had five players reach the double-digit plateau, including Moylan. K-State had four players with 11 points — senior captain Leah Honeycutt, sophomore forward Shanele Stires and junior guards Andrea O'Neal and Gretchen Bertrand.

"To have five players in double-figure pleased me," Coach Susan Yow said. "We spent a lot of time working on our offense in practice since Monday. We looked sharper tonight. This was our best game of the year because we played at both ends."

The 33-point victory for the Lady Cats, now 4-0, over the Lady Titans, 1-3, was the largest margin since the 1988-89 season when K-State beat Cleveland State 77-43.

The win was more of a surprise to the K-State players after the only two-point win last year.

"We didn't anticipate this great of win," Moylan said. "We put two halves together. Our offense was flowing. It was a total team effort and all around good game."

K-State showed its offensive power as the team hit nearly 47 percent from the field, a season-high for the Lady Cats.

"We did a good job setting picks and getting better open shots," Yow said. "This was better than the Lafayette game where our offense brought down our defense."

Moylan said her points came from the help of her team.

"I give credit to the team for opening some shots," Moylan said, whose previous high was at 20 against Miami-Ohio last season. "I felt comfortable with my shooting."

Honeycutt said there was more to Moylan's 8-10 shooting performance from the field.

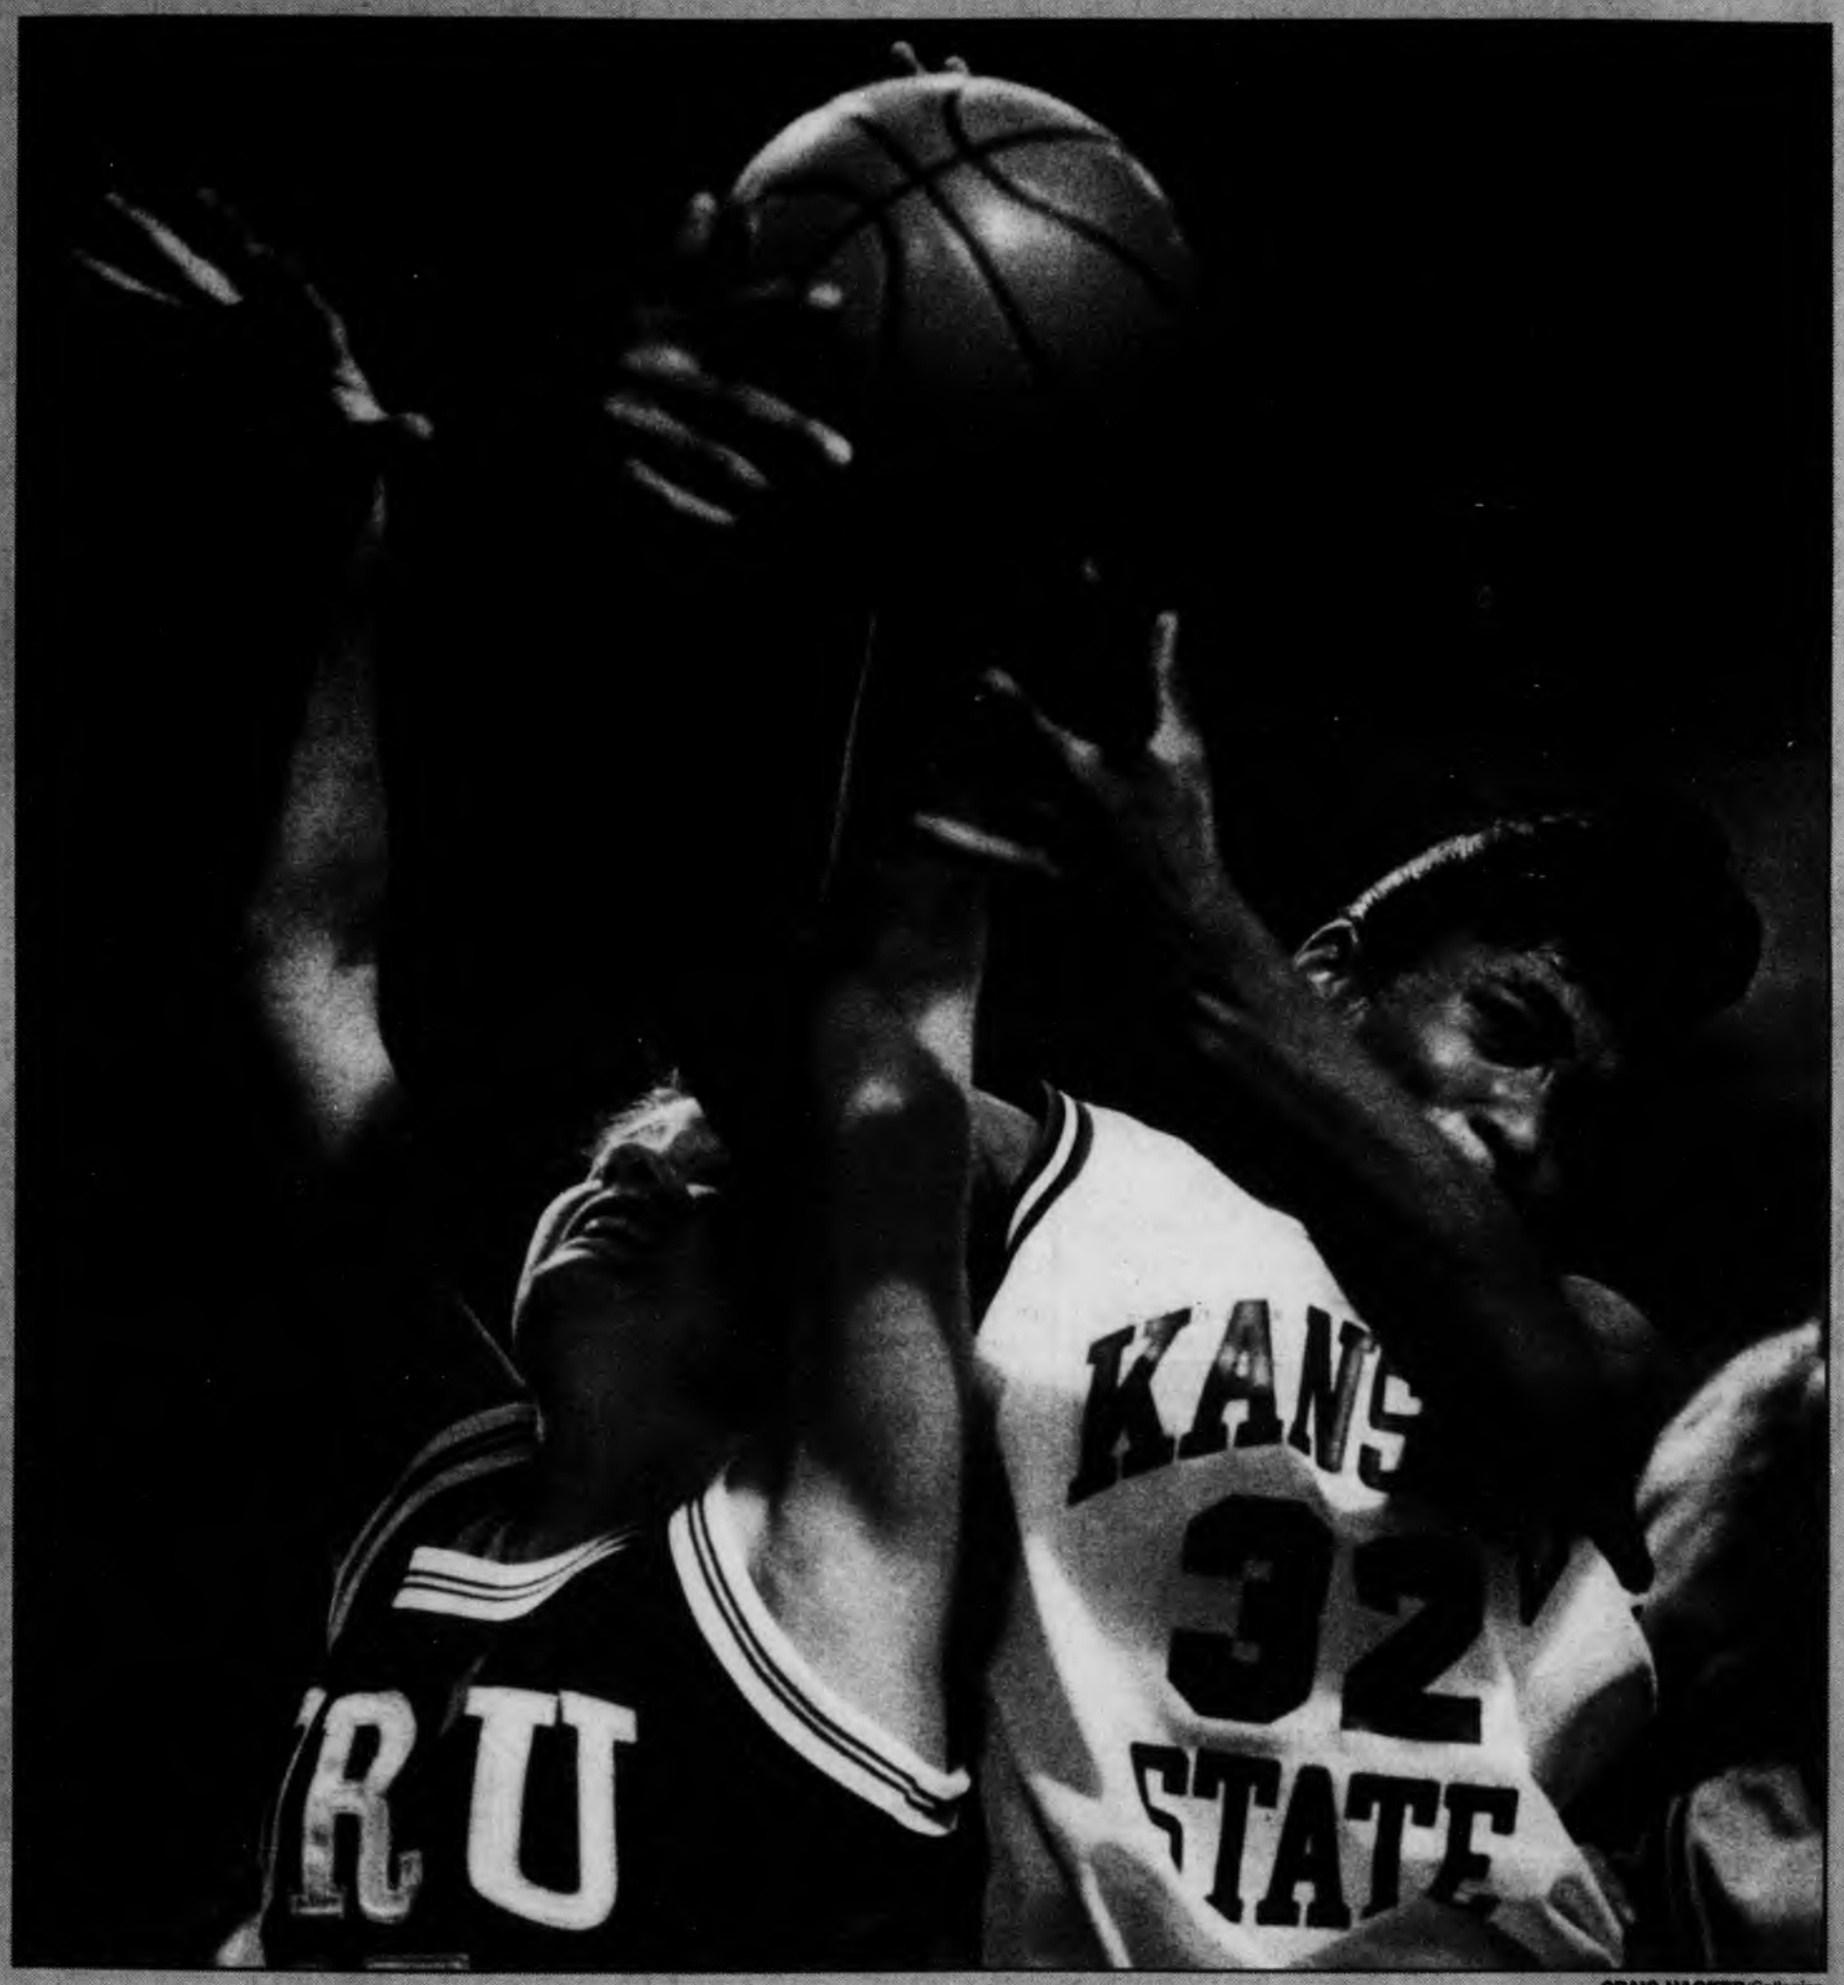
"We know Kelly can shoot," Honeycutt said. "Their defense fell on us. She set herself up for the shots."

Oral Roberts started well in the first half, leading 8-3 early. K-State went on an 18-6 run to take the lead for good. The Lady Cats pulled away and led at halftime by a score of 40-27.

K-State maintained an 18-point lead early in the second half before exploding to a 23-7 spurt to kill any threat of a Lady Titan attack.

The Lady Cats limited Oral Roberts to 34 percent from the field and out-rebounded them 47-30.

"That team was averaging 40 rebounds and 70 points per game," Yow said. "We played well in the post and applied good pressure on them."



A problem Yow pointed out after the game was the large number of turnovers committed by K-State.

"We had 20 turnovers in the game," she said. "It might be that we are substituting a lot of players in a game. I have to watch the tape to see when and where we turn over the ball. We've got to take better care of the ball."

Despite the early success, Yow said she hopes to maintain this level throughout the season.

"We know we've got a long way to go," Yow said. "4-0 makes the road easier to travel. An assistant coach gave me this saying, 'Inch by inch is a cinch. Yard by yard is hard.'

"We've done great things to be 4-0."

Cats look to stay undefeated

STEVE ROCK
Collegian

The Wildcats will put their unbeaten record on the line at 7:30 Saturday night against the 2-0 Sam Houston State Bearkats at Bramlage Coliseum.

Yes, that's the Bearkats — with a "k."

"We don't know that much about them yet," K-State coach Dana Altman said. "We've had a little trouble rounding up some tape on them."

Considering that the Bearkats are coming off of a 2-25 season, a campaign in which they finished 1-17 and in tenth place of the Southland Conference, that may not be too hard to understand.

"It's going to be one of those games where you go in, and you do not know much about them at all," Altman said.

Sam Houston State dropped an exhibition game to the Fort Hood Tankers 110-102 — K-State beat that same team 92-77.

The Cats — with a "C" — close out their season-opening four-game home stand looking to run their record to 4-0 for the first time since the 1987-88 team.

That perfect record was in jeopardy Tuesday night against the 0-3 Ohio Bobcats before Vincent Jackson sank a 10-foot jump shot with three seconds to play in overtime. It was Jackson's sole field goal of the evening.

But the Wildcat win, against a team they were supposed to beat handily, sparked some concerns for Altman.

"We are not where we should be at this point," he said. "We just need to put more pressure on ourselves to get to the level where we need to be.

"We've got a lot of strides to make."

One concern for the Cats, primarily from the Ohio game, is the play of the guard tandem of Askia Jones and Jackson. Against the Bobcats, the two had a combined 6-for-22 shooting performance — a 27 percent clip.

For the season, Jones has made 14 of his 38 shots, and Jackson is 11-for-

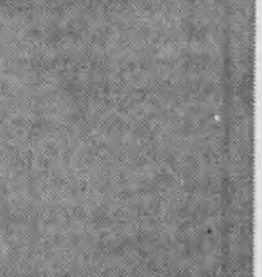
Trip to Tokyo was both good and bad for football team

STEVE ROCK
Collegian



The selection of Wildcat punter Sean Snyder to the Associated Press first-team all-America squad highlighted the end of the K-State football season.

Snyder, who established three Wildcat punting records — including 44.7 yards per punt — was informed of the honor before K-State's trip to Tokyo.

He was flown out of Japan before the rest of the team to make it to Los Angeles on time for the filming of the annual Bob Hope Christmas special.

"It's wonderful," the coach's son said. "It feels terrific. It's a dream come true."

In the season finale, a 38-24 loss to Orange Bowl-bound Nebraska, he punted five times and averaged 46 yards a boot. The Cats scored more points against the No. 11 Huskers than any other Big Eight team.

Sean Snyder

"The Japanese people were wonderful," Cat coach Bill Snyder said of the trip. "The culture — it was a great culture. The experiences that our players had were wonderful experiences. It was a great trip for them."

But the trip to the Coca Cola Bowl in the

FAMOUS LAST WORDS

K-State has been a crazy ride

I don't know exactly why, but it is a tradition at the sports desk that the sports editor write a column on each semester's last day of publication.

Well, now it's my turn. It's the last piece I am writing for the Collegian before I return to Germany.

I know, for many among the Collegian staff and at the athletic department, that it is a relief.

But before I take off and leave the desk alone to my co-editor of this semester, Steve, I would like to say what a great experience it was to write about K-State athletics.

It was four semesters of fun and, well, not so fun.

It was fun to report about sports at the college level, a completely different business back in Germany. It was fun to talk with the athletes after the games and have a more private discussion about life and sports outside the arenas.

FRANK KLEEMANN

And I heard a lot of quotes — some funny, some weird, some unpleasant.

A couple of quotes I can remember as if they were made yesterday. Some were on-record and a few off-record. At times, they were humorous, interesting or serious. But today, in a review, I think they are all kinda funny.

Just a few of my favorites are the following, in no particular order:

■ "As long as we have four players to play with, we don't have a problem."
— Volleyball coach Patti Hagemeyer after four players quit in 1991, reducing the team to nine.

■ "Who is this Kleemann guy?"
— Bill Snyder to sports God David Svoboda after my volleyball column in 1991.

■ "I don't know when and what it was about, but Frank, your last column was really good."
— Athletic director Milt Richards during halftime of the K-State-OSU basketball game in March about my column on the KU game.

■ "Man, Milt will be pissed!"
— Former track coach John Capriotti on the remarks he just made about the budget cuts.

■ "#@*$%©¥πδΣ´µ!!!"
— Capriotti's remarks about the budget cuts.

■ "What was the question?"
— High jumper Connie Teaberry to a bunch of journalists after her Big Eight indoor championships in Lawrence in February.

■ "They aren't dead yet, but their body already is pretty cold."
— Tennis coach Steve Bietau about the strength of Missouri's team.

■ "I thought Coach Snyder wanted to kill me."
— Running back Eric Gallon after an unexpected high amount of playing time against Montana, the first game after his knee injury.

■ "But don't write anything stupid."
— Cross country runner Jeanene Rugan after the District V meet in Ames, Iowa.

■ "What is your name? ... Never heard of it."
— President Jon Wefald to me after my very first assignment, the spiker's opening match in 1991 against Chicago State.

Well, I'm quite sure that by now, a few people do know me.

Many of them liked my writing, and some hated my guts (Hi, Sue Medley).

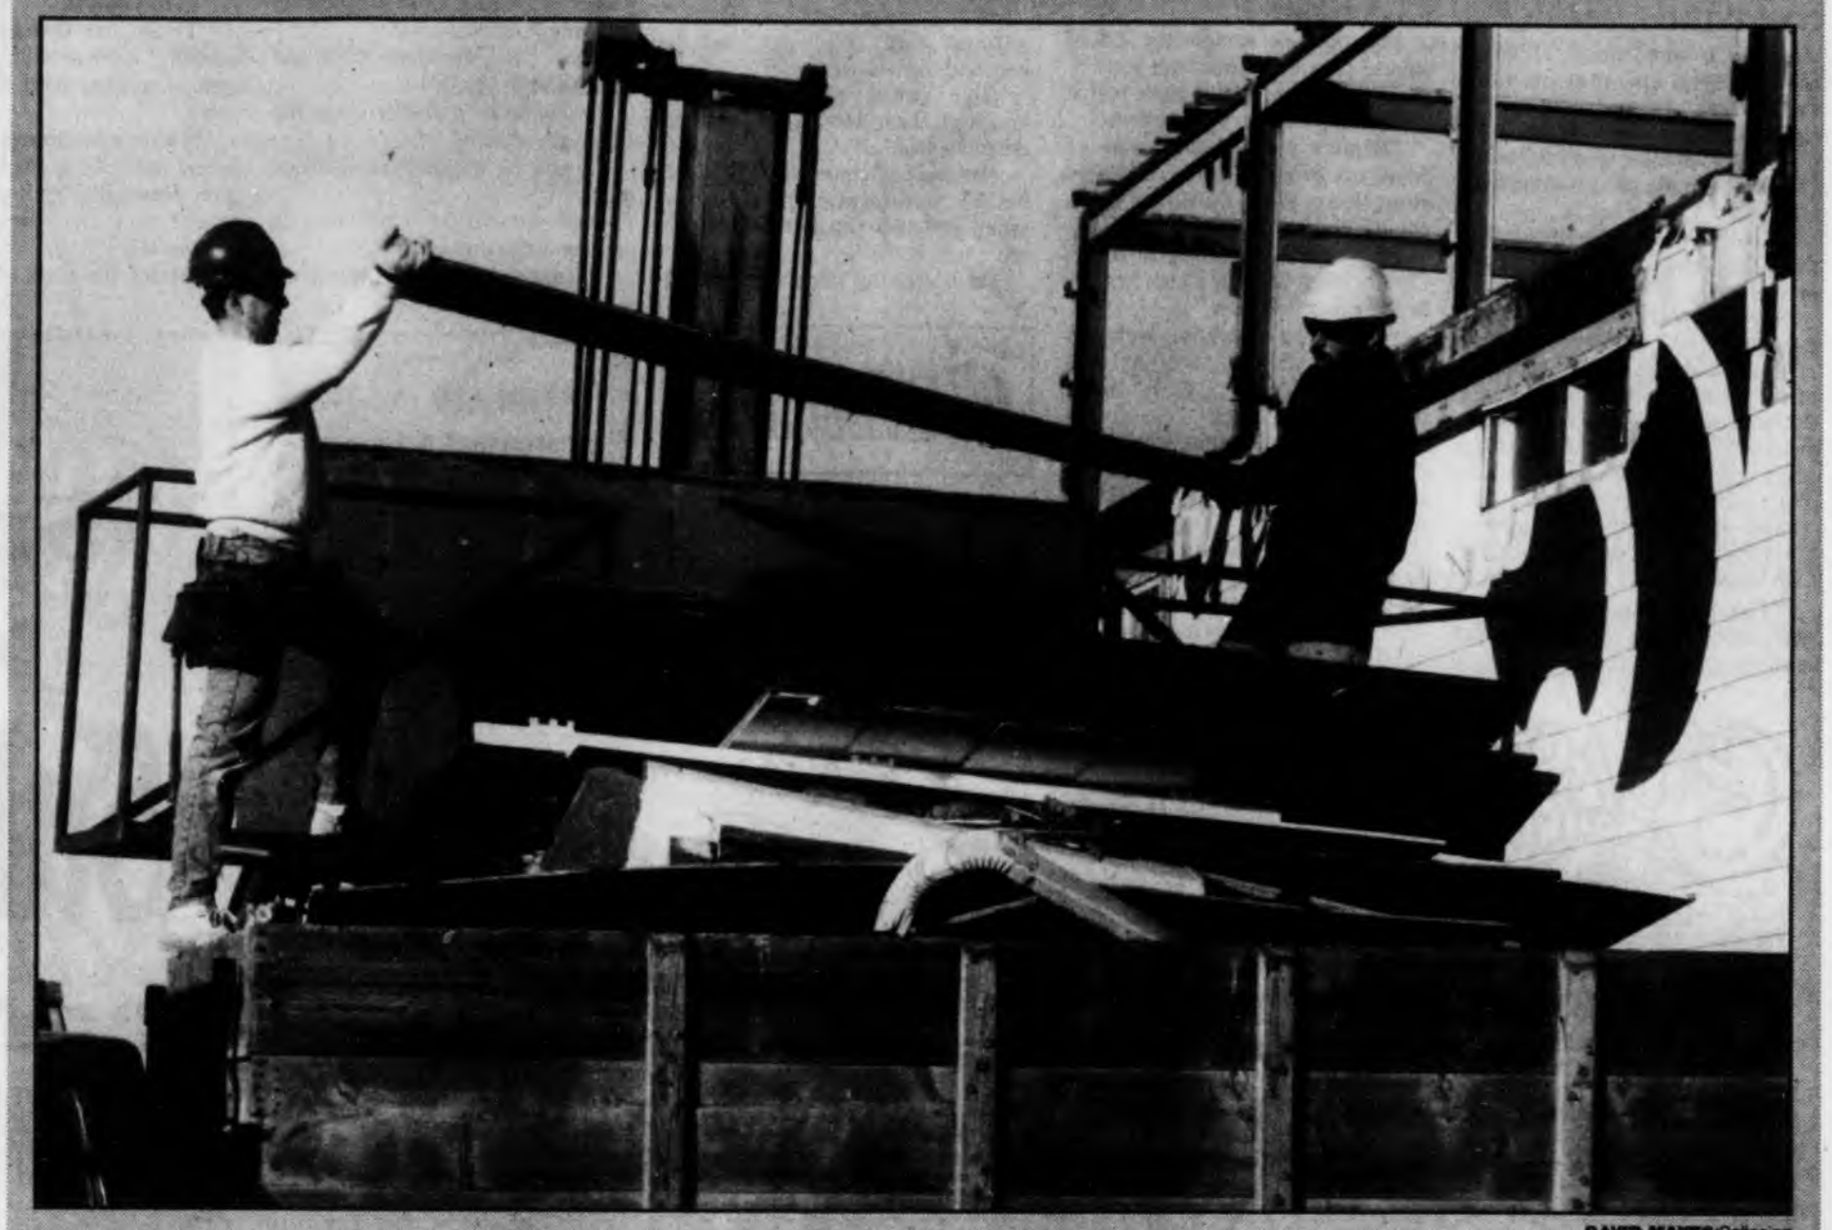
But I feel that not only what I wrote, but also my thoughts, my ideas, and my "that's how I am" provided a few negative attitudes against me, switching now from the athletic department to the Collegian staffers, in particular those this semester.

Just because I am not a native English speaker does not mean that I don't know what I am talking about. I just hope some of the Collegian writers open their mind to new ideas in the future.

Picking all the times on my accent and on my, logically, not perfect grammar (to correct it is the job of copy editors anyway, and I think mine is still better than many Collegian writers) wasn't very funny for long. I got tired of it.

Being sometimes even called, although it was apparently meant as a joke, as "our little Nazi" brought up the thoughts, more than once, to stop writing for the Collegian.

It was just another example of ignoring the existence of others than white Americans. When Bernard Franklin visited the staff to talk about multiculturalism and minorities in general, most of the writers thought there was nothing wrong with our coverage of minorities.



Since his visit three months ago, I could count the stories we had on minorities on one hand. I just hope it will change in the future.

But, and I want to stress that here, positive experiences dominated my time at the Collegian. I really appreciated to get the opportunity to do the thing I always wanted — to write. That got me through the less positive experiences and lifted me again and again to the great things.

I am looking forward to Atlanta 1996 to see again a lot of the athletes I met here. And to the fans, keep up your support of the Wildcats. That is your job.

My job was to report about it.
Vielen Dank und auf Wiedersehen.

'Temporary' box coming down

DAVID MAYES/Collegian

Shane Fingalsen and Tim Schultz, owner of Schultz Construction, throw a piece of the press box at KSU Stadium onto a truck Thursday afternoon. The press box, built in 1968, was intended as a temporary structure and will be replaced by the beginning of the 1993 home football season.

■ The new box will include sky suites that will cost $10,000 a year.

Five-story press box will cost $3.3 million

STEVE ROCK
Collegian

In 1968, a temporary press box was erected at KSU Stadium to house the local media for home football games.

On Thursday — 24 years and 140 games later — that temporary press box began coming down in favor of a $3.3 million, five-story new one.

"There's been a lot of times that I was afraid our temporary press box wouldn't hold up," said Norma Lawrence, an office specialist in the Sports Information department and the only person to have been in the box for all 140 games.

"It's something that we've needed for quite a few years now."

The new press box and accompanying sky suites and club seats is the second step of a two-phase process that was established in 1989 to upgrade the facilities of Wildcat athletics, Jack Key, Associate Athletic Director, said.

The new facility, which is being paid for solely by private donations, will include 22 sky suites, 128 club seats and room for 100 members of the media. The current press box is two levels with no sky suites, no club seats and a 75-seat media room.

The sky suites will be sold for a one-time building access fee of $50,000, which can be paid over a period of five years or as one lump some at a reduced rate of $40,000. Purchasers must also sign a five-year agreement — at a rental price of $10,000 a year — and buy 12 season tickets for the suite. They must be members of the Ahearn Fund at the $1,000 level.

The sky suites will be fully air-conditioned and heated with seating for 12 people in theatre-type seats.

Two reserved parking spaces are included with each suite, and fully catered meals are available, at cost, upon request.

The VIP club seats, accessed by an elevator and complete with restroom and concession area, are available for $1,000 Ahearn-level donors. The seats cost $500 a year, and buyers must commit to a five-year agreement.

"The new press box gives us a chance to raise some money that will help not only football but all of our sports," Key said. "This structure will help us lower our debt in the long run.

"We need more money to compete with other Big Eight schools."

K-State, Key said, is operating on the seventh-lowest budget in the Big Eight — $8.5 million.

Twelve of the 22 sky suites have already been sold, but none of the club seats have. Plans are for the facility to be completed by the first game of the 1993 season — Sept. 4 against New Mexico State.

"In reality, looking at our facilities that we have at K-State, the press box was really the only thing that was inferior," Key said.

The first step of that two-step process is a new indoor practice facility for the football team, which is currently being constructed south of Bramlage Coliseum for $2 million. It will measure 230 feet wide and 400 feet long — the indoor practice facility used by the Kansas City Chiefs is 200' by 315'.

"If it's not the biggest in the United States, it will be one of the top five nationwide," Key said.

"I think it's going to make our football team better, and at the same time, if a student athlete comes to K-State, this might be an influence.

"Those are the kinds of things that sell a kid on whether or not he comes to school here."

The new practice facility is due to be completed in mid-April.

SPORTS DIGEST

▶JAYHAWKS' RICHEY SUFFERS KNEE SPRAIN

LAWRENCE, Kan. (AP) — Junior forward Patrick Richey suffered a knee sprain and is expected to miss two to three weeks, says Kansas basketball coach Roy Williams.

Richey was scheduled for surgery next Thursday.

The news of Richey's injury came Thursday, one day after 7-foot-2 sophomore center Greg Ostertag underwent surgery to repair a stress fracture of the lower right tibia.

The injuries, coupled with the transfer of sophomore forward Ben Davis to Florida, leave Kansas with just nine healthy scholarship players and just one — 6-10 center Eric Pauley — taller than 6-7.

The 6-8 Richey has been plagued with injuries during his career.

Last season he missed eight games with two different injuries, including a sore back in November and a stress fracture in mid-season.

Richey also missed three games in his freshman season with a broken finger.

▶ROYALS ACQUIRE YET ANOTHER SHORTSTOP

LOUISVILLE, Ky. (AP) — The Kansas City Royals announced several player moves and acquisitions Thursday.

The Kansas City Royals acquired minor league shortstop Mike Guerrero from the Milwaukee Brewers for pitcher Carlos Maldonado. Guerrero hit .245 with one home run and 28 RBI this year at El Paso. He was assigned to the Royals' Omaha roster.

Maldonado has been in the Royals organization since 1986. He was 7-4 with a 3.60 ERA with 16 saves in 47 relief appearances with Omaha in 1992.

The Royals also agreed to terms for minor league contracts with seven other minor league free agents.

▶METS SIGN PITCHER TANANA FOR $1.7 MILLION

NEW YORK (AP) — The New York Mets filled a need for a starting pitcher Thursday by signing free agent left-hander Frank Tanana to a one-year contract for $1.7 million.

Tanana, 39, was 13-11 with a 4.39 ERA for the Detroit Tigers last season. He started his career with the California Angels in 1973 and has a lifetime record of 233-219.

He was signed as a free agent by Texas before the start of the 1982 season and traded to Detroit in 1985.

Tanana got a $200,000 signing bonus to sign with the Mets.

▶PITT STATE GORILLAS PLAY FOR TITLE AGAIN

PITTSBURG, Kan. (AP) — The unbeaten Pittsburgh State Gorillas, the football dynasty out of a little southeast Kansas community, will meet Jacksonville State in Florence, Ala., to defend their NCAA Division II football title Saturday.

In just three years of NCAA Division II competition after moving up from the NAIA, the Gorillas haven't done worse than the semifinals, including the title last year.

Tokyo Dome wasn't all fun.

Immediately following the game, Snyder was quoted as saying, "This was the most poorly organized event in the history of college sports. The people who put on the game have no clue."

He was then asked if he had any advice for Michigan State and Wisconsin — the competitors in next year's Coca Cola Bowl.

"I'd tell them they were absolute fools if they choose to come here."

Thursday afternoon, Snyder set the record straight.

"The statements that were made, at least from my perspective, were justified," he said. "I was lied to on every turn of the hat. I asked for nothing other than to be treated equally at all times, and that was not the case.

"There isn't anything that I would take back."

One particular area of concern for Snyder was the post-game awards ceremony. He had originally been told that both teams were to stay on the field following the game. But after the contest, game officials told Snyder they just wanted him and Andre Coleman, who was voted K-State's player of the game.

Snyder pulled himself and Coleman out of the ceremony, saying, "If you don't want my football team, then you don't want me."

Thursday afternoon, he reiterated the point.

"Is there anybody in here that would have done it any different?"

The room silenced.

K-State's struggling offense — the one that finished the season with a 244-yard per-game average, good for 105th in the nation — loses just six of the 22 players listed on the final two-deep chart.

"In our offense, we don't lose a great deal," Snyder said. "And where we do lose, I think we'll be able to supplement that."

One graduating senior is quarterback Matt Garber, who had his best collegiate game in his finale against Nebraska, completing 19 of 29 passes for 246 yards.

That leaves the quarterback slot, oddly enough, somewhat open.

Snyder did say that Smargiasso will go into spring drills as the No. 1 man, but redshirt Chad May just might challenge him for the nod. May, who started as a freshman for Cal-State Fullerton after throwing for 2,000 yards as a senior in high school, will have two years of eligibility remaining.

"He's done very, very well," Snyder said. "We're awfully pleased with his progress. He's going to be a factor."

The end of the Wildcats' 5-6 season left one glaring question — what happened to the team that was 7-4 a year ago and flirted with a bowl bid?

Snyder's answer was simple.

"We probably took for granted just how good of a football team we were."

High school deals with violence

maintain an atmosphere of safety for students, and that includes everything from security to equipment," she said.

Hill said she has a great deal of confidence in the faculty at the high school.

"Any time there is an incident at the high school, action is taken immediately," Hill said.

She said prevention of violence is important.

Hill said the MHS security officer contacts the Riley County Police Department every Monday morning to find out if anything occurred over the weekend that might carry over to school.

She said there are plans to purchase a metal detector for the high school.

"There have never been any guns found at the high school, but that's not to say there aren't any there," she said.

Fox said she thought the school should provide quarterly reports to the public that would include police disclosure of any acts of violence.

"If more people were aware of what was going on up there, maybe something more could be done about it," she said.

She said she thought Riley County High School, which her son attends, is much safer.

"When you're dealing with 163 students versus 1,800, it's definitely safer and more personable," she said.

But Hill, while saying she would like to see no fights, also believes eliminating all fights at MHS is impossible.

"That's not likely, nor is it realistic," she said. "What we're trying to do is minimize and decrease the severity of these conflicts."

K-State to take on 2-0 Bearkats

27 — a combined 38 percent.

"He's (Jones) got 16 and 15 shots in the last two games, and some of those are very good shots," Altman said. "He just hasn't knocked them down yet."

One guard who has been knocking them down is sophomore Brian Henson.

Henson has connected on 12 of his 23 3-point attempts and has taken just two shots inside of the arc.

He is leading the Cats with an average of 15 points per game and is looking for his first start of the young season.

"He's definitely pushing both Askia and Vince for a position on the wing," Altman said.

"He's played awfully well, and he's given us spark."

Could he be a starter come the Big Eight season?

"Heck, he might start Saturday night."

And he might start before another small crowd.

Tuesday's victory was witnessed by a Bramlage Coliseum-low 5,013 fans.

The Cats are drawing an average of just 5,274 fans through three games this season.

"Those are things you can't control," Altman said. "If we play well, if we play hard, our fans will come.

"We're going through a learning period here. It's going to take some time. Hopefully we'll put a product on the floor that the people will want to see."

But for the Cats, that product may have to play better than it did Tuesday night.

"Ohio really scared us," forward Aaron Collier said. "We don't want to be like that again."

K-State embarks on a four-game road trip following Saturday's contest, including games against the University of Missouri-Kansas City and Wichita State.

BY RICHARD ANDRADE

"Look, honey, a falling star! Make a wi-ahhhh!"

If you were lying in bed around 11 p.m. Sunday and were suddenly struck with the eerie sensation that a two-mile wide asteroid was speeding toward Earth at 85,000 mph, you're much more perceptive than we are.

The asteroid Toutatis zipped past the planet at a distance of 2.2 million miles, which may seem like a lot, but in celestial terms, it's a hairbreadth.

The asteroid, if it had hit, would not have exactly trumpeted the Christmas season.

"It would be catastrophic if it hit the Earth," said Don Yeomans, a Jet Propulsion Laboratory research astronomer.

"It would throw up enough material to shut down the sunlight, and the plants would have died. It wouldn't have wiped out everything, but millions of people would expire." (Expire? What are we, coupons?)

Toutatis is on an orbit that takes it through our immediate galactic neighborhood every four years, passing at varying distances.

In 1996 and 2000, the asteroid will miss by a long shot, but in 2004, Touatis will zoom within 1 million miles of Mother E. That's only about four times the distance between Earth and its moon.

Evidently hit on the head by the Yule log

Dean Bordenave of Hagerstown, Md., hangs his Christmas tree upside down.

Obviously, he's a kooky, wacky, nutty, krazy-with-a-K kind of guy.

For nearly a decade, Bordenave has suspended his decorated tree from his ceiling, and he says gravity has had little effect on it.

The flipped fir has attracted the attention of passersby like the woman who asked Bordenave to take a picture of her with his tree so she'd have proof of what she had seen.

Bordenave takes the notoriety in stride, though.

"I think some people think I'm a devil worshiper," he said. "The people I work with think I'm crazy."

Weekend doesn't think you're crazy, Dave.

We're just curious to know how you celebrate Easter.

The art of lying to your friends and family

DavidSchmidt is the ingenious inventor of the Gotta Go, a small box that, when attached to your telephone, allows you to simulate the phone company's call waiting clicking sound.

Presto. Now there's an instant escape hatch from long, boring, one-sided phone conversations.

The idea for the device hit Schmidt while he was trying to find a polite way to end rambling phone calls from his chatty girlfriend.

"She was calling me every day at my busiest times and just gabbing, gabbing, gabbing," Schmidt said.

Gotta Go sells for $14.95 and is often cheaper than the real call waiting services offered by telephone companies.

A royal couple quite unlike Charles and Di

"I have found it impossible to carry on the heavy burden of responsibility and to discharge the duties of King as I would wish to do without the help and support of the woman I love."

These were the words King Edward VIII used on this day in 1936, when he announced he was abdicating the British throne in order to marry American divorcée Wallis Simpson.

Edward, the only British sovereign ever to voluntarily step down, first met Simpson in 1930 and was in love with her by 1934, while she was still married to her second husband.

King for only 11 months and 10 days before resigning, Edward ideally wanted to remain monarch after the marriage. But a horrified cabinet said, in essence, "Sorry, buster, no can do." It deemed such an action would be contradictory with his position as head of the Church of England.

Forced to make a choice between the throne and love, Edward chose love.

The couple married June 3, 1937, in France, after Simpson's second divorce was finalized.

After the marriage, Edward's brother became King George VI, and Ed became the Duke of Windsor.

In 1940, Edward was appointed governor of the Bahama Islands, but it was not until 1967 that the couple was invited to an official pubic ceremony with other members of the royal family.

Platonic?

STORY BY CHRISTINA CARBAJAL

DESIGN BY DEANNA ADAMS

Harry: "You realize, of course, that we can never be friends."

Sally: "Why not?"

Harry: "What I'm saying is ... men and women can never be friends because the sex part always gets in the way."

Sally: "That's not true. I have a number of men friends, and no sex is involved."

Harry: "No you don't. ... What I'm saying to you is they all want to have sex with you."

Sally: "They do not. ... What if they don't want to have sex with you?"

Harry: "That doesn't matter, because the sex thing is already out there. So the relationship is ultimately doomed, and that is the end of the story."

But is it really?

This dialogue, from the 1989 movie "When Harry Met Sally," is one that may strike up similar conversations about platonic relationships between men and women.

The questions fly. Can men and women get past the sexual element that may come up in relationships? Is it even possible to have close relationships with the opposite sex?

For some, the benefits gained from friendships with the opposite sex make for interesting relationships. For others, sticking with friends of their own gender is the smartest option.

John Robertson, psychologist at Lafene Health Center, said quality, not gender, makes or breaks a friendship.

"It's what one brings to it rather than the maleness or femaleness of the friendship," Robertson said.

For Jake McCanless, sophomore in business administration, having close male friends is more comfortable than having female friends.

"To me, a best friend is someone who you can tell everything, and they understand," McCanless said.

"It's better for me to talk to a guy, because a guy understands what I understand," he said.

McCanless said he has had friendships with women, but no one to whom he really became close.

Looking back, he said he does have casual friendships with women, and in high school he used to talk to one girl about problems with his dating situation.

Other than that, he didn't really think he would be able to share anything more with her in a friendship.

Robertson said he thought this discrepancy in communication may be due to the way men and women are socialized as children.

Women have a tendency to be socialized to talking, sharing and expressing feelings. Men are socialized to expressing their feelings more through actions.

"That's why many couples come in for counseling, because they don't understand what the other is doing. The man says, 'All she wants to do is talk,' while the woman says, 'He just wants to do things for me,'" Robertson said.

But not everyone has the same reservations about sharing her or his inner secrets with a friend of the opposite sex.

Dan Brungardt, senior in advertising, said his female friends bring an extra aspect to how he sees things.

"You get to learn a lot about what women expect from not only guys, but society," Brungardt said. "If you're a guy that runs around with just other guys, you're in for a real shock."

But the ability for friends of the opposite sex to honestly communicate can be an advantage to having friends of the opposite sex.

Jamie Polk, senior in accounting, has known her friend David since both were 4 years old. She said she likes his honesty about different issues and about her actions.

"If he thinks I'm being a bitch, he'll tell me. He won't be afraid to hurt my feelings," she said.

A different point of view may also bring a sense of realism to a friendship.

"When you talk with your girlfriends, you might just be complaining about guys," said Sarah Huerter, sophomore in political science. "With guys, you get a more rational or overall view of the situation."

It's a fine line, though, as to how far people should go in telling what they think about their friends' actions.

Mike Wilhelm, sophomore in economics, said he thought it could be better to let things go and see what happens.

Wilhelm described a situation where two of his friends began dating, and he wasn't sure if it was the best thing to do. Instead of saying anything negative, Wilhelm said he encouraged his female friend and hoped things would work out.

After about four or five months, the couple started having problems, and his female friend asked for his opinion about the situation. He eventually told her what he really thought.

"She was mad, and she kind of listened to me, but now they're back together," Wilhelm said.

But is it realistic to see concern over a friend changing into a more romantic relationship, such as in the movie "When Harry Met Sally?"

Robertson said it does depend on the personalities of the couple, but it is important to have a sense of communication with another person before getting romantically involved.

Meghan Breneman, sophomore in business administration, said she tried dating one of her close friends. It didn't work out in the beginning. After a break, they tried again. This time she said they are progressing better.

She thought maturity was a factor in the success of their relationship now.

Brungardt said he also dated one of his close friends, but it didn't quite work out.

"I think we had different experiences on each of our parts," he said. "It just didn't click. It didn't affect our friendship because we were mature enough to realize it wasn't meant to be."

Life after Jim Henson: Muppets do "A Christmas Carol"

Creator's son tries to go where he thinks his father would have gone

ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — It's 6:15 p.m. Jeez, lots of kids. They wander and whine, squirm and giggle, all winter coats and popcorn.

Then, with the dim of the lights and a whoop from the young audience, comes the Muppets first feature-length outing since the death of their creator, Jim Henson.

The Muppets doing "A Christmas Carol?"

"We wanted to take the Muppets in a new direction, which is the way my father would have felt," said Brian Henson, who directed and is the eldest son in Jim's brood of five.

"They had done three films, where they played themselves and their relationships in a group, and in this one it really felt like we needed to do something very different that allowed these characters a little more creative freedom," Henson said.

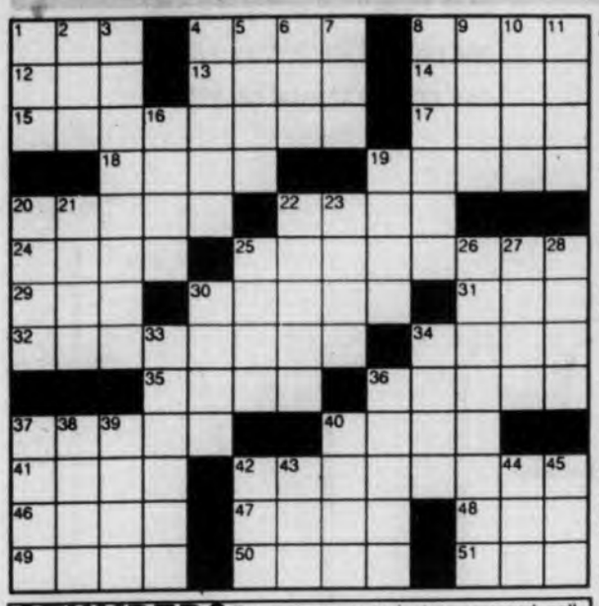
Henson took control of his father's company at 26, after Jim's sudden death in May 1990.

"When my father died it was a terribly traumatic experience for everybody in the company, and certainly for my family," Henson, 29, said. "And then I think there was a time of mourning and then a time for the family and the company to get back together and realize that what we wanted to do was carry on."

Kermit, created by Jim in 1955, fell silent for a short time after Jim died.

Jim Henson had wanted Kermit to go on if anything happened to him and had a hand in picking Steve Whitmire to take over the common-sensical frog. Whitmire had worked with Jim for more than 10 years.

"It took a long time for Stevie to get it right," said Frank Oz, the voice of Miss Piggy and executive producer of the movie. "It was odd in the beginning, no question about it, but what made it easier was that I love Stevie, and Stevie and Jim were very close, and we're all family."



Henson and Oz agreed that basic human qualities and quirks sustain the Muppets.

"The Muppets interrelate on a very, very, very basic level," Henson said. "They're not hip or contemporary. They've invented their own jargons and their own hipnesses and their one weird quirky mannerisms."

YOU'RE ASKING ME?

by Cassandra Duveaux

Reader needs to tell parents real reason for staying here

DEAR CASSANDRA,

I need a break. I'm sick of school. I'm sick of people. I need time alone. But my parents want me home for the entire winter break. I'll go for Christmas, but I want to spend New Year's Eve back here in Manhattan. How do I break the news to them?

Independent Freshman

DEAR INDEPENDENT,

And you want to come back here to spend New Year's Eve alone? I detect another reason, maybe a New Year's Eve party with someone of interest? Be honest with your parents and tell them the real reason. Give them a little credit for understanding what it was like being young and having a romantic interest in someone. Being over 40 doesn't mean "brain dead."

DEAR CASSANDRA,

You seem like someone who might carry a little clout around the Collegian. Perhaps you can help me out. What gives with the huge full page Royal Purple ads in the paper? Does anyone really think I'm going to be more likely to purchase a yearbook knowing that "13 dedicated students" are "working to record my memories?"

I'm ecstatic that the assistant editor has found her little niche in society by working on the RP staff, but does her position of assistant editor really need to be over glorified by killing trees and/or wasting valuable space that could be used for more newsworthy items?

The same holds true for the equally worthless "In 10 years will you remember the athletic victories, all-night study sessions and terrific friendships you swore would last a lifetime?" ads. I have purchased the Royal Purple for three years, now (with no encouragement from cheesy ads, I might add), and I have yet to see an article, photo, etc., that in any way related to me or any of my "terrific friendships."

Unless you are someone a little more important than Joe Average College Student, I imagine this will usually hold true. Thus the ads are not only pointless but are also a little misleading. Please, Cassandra, help end this madness!

Irritated

DEAR IRRITATED,

I have seen the ads and do not believe they would adversely effect the sale of the yearbook to any large extent. Yet they may not be accomplishing the overall intent of the advertisement, which, I assume, is to promote sales of the Royal Purple.

Personally, I feel that an excellent and award-winning yearbook such as the Royal Purple does not need much (if any) advertising. If you have any positive, constructive suggestions for improving the content of this year's publication, I am sure the dedicated and hard-working RP staff would like to hear them.

Who knows — you might get to know one of them and form a "terrific friendship." Stranger things have happened.

Senate also passes DB92 bill committee chairman and three appointed by the University Activities Board chairman.

The committee will divide campus groups into institutional services and organizations.

All institutional services' individual budgets are now due by the second Friday of February, while organizations' budgets for fall semester projects will be due by the second Friday of February and for spring semester projects by the fourth Friday of September.

Sara Caldwell, finance committee chairwoman, said the legislation should encourage groups to do more than have meetings. She hopes that it will encourage them to sponsor more events on campus.

The bill also requires the groups look for alternate sources of funding before submitting their requests to the committee.

Policies are also set forth about what allotted monies may or may not be spent on.

Modifications of services in Holton Hall will be taking place as that bill passed after much discussion concerning the future of U-LearN.

Senate also approved a fee increase for KSDB-91.9. Fees will increase from 85 cents to one dollar for full-time students, while the fees of 50 cents for part-time students and 10 cents per credit hour for summer students will remain the same. The money from the fee will fund the purchase of a type of transmittor, Joe Montgomery, station manager, said.

The bill proposing to establish a student vice president position was tabled until the Jan. 21 meeting. Only 42 senators remained at the meeting at the time the motion was to be discussed, while a minimum of 45 voting in favor would be required for the bill to pass.

concentrate for most of the day. I was almost sick from being nervous because this is such a life-changing opportunity, so I went to Nancy Twiss' office to wait and be sick there.

"I called my answering machine, and there was a message from the British consulate in Chicago. Then I screamed a lot. Then I called my mother to ask her if she would take care of my cat for two years while I was in England, then she screamed."

Riemann said there are several factors in her success. She credit-ed Nancy Twiss for assistance in preparing for the scholarship.

"Perseverance and resilience, I think, is the main thing to success in anything," Riemann said.

Winners aren't programmed from the start, she said.

"You have to find something you're interested in and do it as well as you can — explore it as much as possible," she said.

Riemann said she is considering attending Manchester, Cambridge or Oxford, and she is also looking forward to traveling.

Students question fee

But it's not a class, it's a job," Hampl said. "They get paid for it."

Students also questioned why the faculty, not the students, got new computers.

Ulrich said he met with students this week and identified where and for what fee money is spent. Some of the students said they did not think all the expenditures were fair.

"I feel the money was spent for student use, but that the money was not spent fairly because only a few students have access to the equipment," Revey said.

Ulrich said changes will be made to satisfy the students.

"The students want us to let them know where the money is going to be spent, and the students want access to facilities which the money is being spent on," he said.

A decision has not yet been reached concerning the controversy over placement of the new computers.

"I had a student keep telling me he did not think it was fair. I asked him what he proposed to do, and he said, 'Give the students the computers back'," Ulrich said.

He said he believes faculty members have done their part because they gave up their computers for student use after the student fee was implemented.

The faculty went for three months without computers before receiving the new ones.

Ulrich said he did not think it was fair to take away the faculty's computers, because they had all their software on them.

He said if the department did give the students the new computers, then the department would have to buy the faculty new computers again.

"I made him an offer of buying the students two new 486 computers," Ulrich said. "I still have to discuss this with the faculty. I do not think this is necessary, and I don't think the faculty will either."

Ulrich said students believe the money was spent properly, except that they don't have full access to the equipment.

"We're going to resolve the situation so they're happy."

economic policy and coordinate a new National Economic Council.

■ Roger Altman, a Wall Street investment banker, who will serve as Bentsen's top deputy.

■ Economist Alice Rivlin, former director of the Congressional Budget Office, who will be Panetta's deputy.

Taken together, the five nominees offer what Clinton hopes will be the right mix of economic philosophy and practical skill to fill in the details of his economic proposals and get them enacted. Rivlin and Panetta, in particular, are known as strong advocates for cutting the federal deficit.

"These people are seasoned, skilled, incredibly able and ready to work for the American people," Clinton said of his first appointees, who appeared with him at a news conference in the Old Statehouse.

The appointments came on a day that brought yet more encouraging news about the economy. The government reported new claims for jobless benefits dropped in November, as did wholesale prices.

Marines on lookout

Army troops from Fort Drum, N.Y., were scheduled to begin arriving over the weekend in Baidoa, then split off and seize three other centers of the starvation zone — Belet Wen, Oddur and Gailassi. Fresh Marines were expected in Mogadishu by today.

Relief officials reported Thursday that a large convoy of Somali "technicals" — jeeps and pickup trucks mounted with guns and cannons — was spotted headed west from the Baidoa area toward the Ethiopian border.

Alarmed by sporadic gunfire near the U.S. Embassy compound in Mogadishu, Marines on Thursday raided several buildings in pursuit of snipers.

the diseases associated with it.

"Hunger and starvation does not draw the public attention," Akhimien said.

"They are aware of the famine in Somalia, so they send food. They want to just fix that problem. But the gravity of the problem in Africa is far more than that.

"Capital food production is at a rate of minus 1.5 percent while population is growing at a rate of 3.3 percent. The food production is not meeting the minimum need of the population increase," he said.

Akhimien said the solution is to address the root cause of the problem, not the symptoms.

"There is no reason in the world why someone in Africa or anywhere else should die of hunger given the resources we have," Akhimien said.

Dennis Law, professor of landscape architecture, is a member of the advisory board for Tractors for Our Daily Bread.

"The best thing we can do to help to countries in Africa is to teach them to be self-sustaining," Law said.

Akhimien's solution is a simple one. Get people to donate their old tractors, restore them and ship them to Africa for the farmers.

"It's an exciting project," Law said. "Akhimien is taking America's farming junk and turning it into something that's valuable in Africa. Its a worthwhile cause and its success will rely on the compassion of the American people."

TFODB has acquired 27 Ford 8Ns — rugged, simple tractors that are easy to operate and maintain.

"Our immediate goal is to start a pilot project with six tractors and the appropriate implements in Nigeria. We also want to provide training and maintenance facilities and spare parts, but everything takes money," Akhimien said.

He said TFODB still has much work to do before actually getting the tractors to the farmers.

"We will need at least $200,000 to get the project started in Nigeria," he said.

"This will cover the cost of taking mechanics to begin training people in Nigeria and to set up maintenance shops to keep the tractors running," Akhimien said.

But he is confident Americans will chip in to get the work started.

Akhimien said hunger and starvation causes more deaths than cancer or AIDS, and yet is preventable with the right technology and some human compassion.

Sisters die in auto accident

MEGAN MULLIKIN
Collegian

Two K-State students were killed Dec. 19 when their car ran off Interstate 70 in central Missouri.

Shayvon and Cherron "Toshia" Bright were driving to Atlanta to spend the holidays with their parents who moved from Manhattan earlier in this year.

The highway patrol reported that the car hit the median and vaulted 200 feet before impact.

Toshia Bright

The two sisters were both active in the community and on campus. Shayvon, sophomore in hotel restaurant management, was a member of United Black Voices and Ebony Theatre and Toshia, freshman in arts and sciences, was a member of the Multicultural Student Council and was one of the founders of the Ultra Lite dance team.

Through Upward Bound and an accelerated program at Manhattan High School Toshia was able to graduate a year early. Upward Bound has established an award in Toshia's honor, Upward Bound director Reggie McGowan said.

Shayvon Bright

"The award is the Toshia Bright Spirit Award. It was established because of Toshia's energy and commitment to life and academic excellence. We will choose the most outstanding Upward Bound student each year to receive the award. They will have to exemplify the spirit and commitment to a high quality of life that Toshia did, McGowan said.

"Loud and clear, we will always remember her spirit, the way she could get along with everyone and her strong support for a family environment," he said.

Daphne Tabor, Shayvon's roommate and a sophomore in psychology, said Shayvon was very outgoing.

"She had lots of friends. Just about everyone she met liked her. She was also very persistent, and she was always getting a lot of stuff done," Tabor said.

"She loved to cook. She enjoyed having a good time, and it didn't matter what she was doing. She also loved singing and acting," she

CRAIG HACKER/Collegian

A person rushes past a building at 619 Pottawatomie Ave. Tuesday night after it was reported burning at about 7 p.m. The structure, which housed Zarger Heating and Air Conditioning and a workshop owned by Charles and Judy Fleeker, was severely damaged by the fire.

Charles and Judy Fleeker hugged each other as they watched their workshop go up in flames Tuesday night.

The Manhattan Fire Department was called at about 7 p.m. to 619 Pottawatomie Ave. because the building that housed the Fleeker's workshop and Zarger Heating and Air Conditioning had caught fire.

Fire Chief Larry Reese said major damage was done to the Fleeker's shop at the rear area of the building. The building was a total loss, but no one was seriously hurt.

Reese said the building contained a few chemicals, such as boric acid and a small barbecue with propane, but that they had not exploded.

With the cold temperatures and ice, Reese said it was hard for the firefighters to get around, and extra firefighters were call in.

"We had several guys fall on the ice," he said. "It was also hard to handle the hoses without sliding around on the ice."

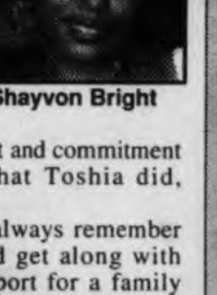
The possible cause of the fire will be investigated in the morning, Reese said, due to the bad weather and lack of light.

Judy Fleeker said the shop had been in the family for three generations.

"My husband's grandfather started the shop," she said with tears in her eyes. "We also just got through working on the end where the fire was at three years ago.

"Everyone in my family has their own personal hobby inside the shop or two others located near our house," she said.

The burned shop was located about 250 feet from the Fleeker's home.



Judy Fleeker said she found out about the fire when a friend yelled to call the fire department.

"Man, did that get my adrenalin pumping," said Fleeker, who said there were more than $1,000 worth of tools in the shop.

"It looks like we have a day off," she said to her husband.

"My husband's grandfather started the shop."

Oleen named to education committee

Kansas Sen. Lana Oleen,
R-Manhattan
Age: 43
Education: Bachelor's degree from Emporia State University in 1972, master's degree from Emporia State in 1977
Residence: Manhattan
Marital status: Married to Kent Oleen, two children
Religious affiliation: Lutheran
Occupation: Educator/Homemaker
Political and government experience: Elected to Kansas Senate in 1988; chairwoman, Riley County Republicans; past vice-chairwoman of Confirmations; past chairwoman of Governmental Organization; past vice-chairwoman of Labor, Industry and Small Business; current chairwoman of Senate Federal and State Affairs; and current chairwoman of House and Senate Joint Committee on Legislative Educational Planning.
Issues: Pro-choice, supported last year's legislation that placed some restrictions on abortion rights; opposes casino gambling off Indian reservations; is not opposed to universal health care for Kansas, but would have to see proposed costs first.

STEPHANIE FUQUA
Collegian

Editor's note: This is the first of a three-part series highlighting local legislators' thoughts on the current legislative session.

Education was an important issue for many Manhattan residents during last year's election. As a result of committee appointments, area citizens might have more influence in education during the Kansas Legislature's 1993 session.

Sen. Lana Oleen, R-Manhattan, has been named chairwoman of the House and Senate Joint Committee on Legislative Educational Planning.

Senators and representatives were sworn in Monday and are beginning work on some minor changes in the school finance law.

"There has been discussion throughout the state about the new school finance funding, whether to stay or go," Oleen said. "This area, meaning Manhattan, Junction City, has found it to be a very good formula for us. I would be hard-pressed to see a change, other than to fine-tune it for southwest Kansas."

All higher-education issues will also come before the education committee. Oleen said she believes education is a top priority in the area and was pleased to be selected for that committee.

Oleen is also a member of the Midwest Higher Education Compact. It is composed of six states who discuss higher-education issues.

"It is co-related with serving on the education committee and chairing the Higher Education Committee,"

THE ISSUES THIS SESSION

▶ Casinos

Courts have ordered the state enter into negotiations with Indian tribes interested in opening casinos on and off reservations. The 1988 Indian Gaming Regulatory Act says legalized lottery and parimutual betting must allow casino gambling on reservations.

To be decided is where and how many casinos can be built, hours of operation, how much people can bet, types of gambling allowed and how much the state will get.

Marine dies in firefight with Somalis

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — A Marine patrolling near Mogadishu airport was killed Tuesday in a firefight with Somali gunmen in the first death of a U.S. serviceman in Operation Restore Hope, a Pentagon official said Tuesday.

The dead Marine was with the 3rd Battalion, 11th Marine Regiment, based at Twentynine Palms Marine Corps Air Ground Combat Center in California, according to base spokesman Capt. John Manley.

The soldier's name was withheld until relatives could be notified.

The Marines were on a security patrol near the Mogadishu airport when the shooting occurred, the Pentagon official said. He said the unit took some fire, returned fire and pulled its people back.

When the unit regrouped, a head count was taken and one Marine was found to be missing. When the Marines returned to the scene of the incident, the Marine's body was found, the official said.

There was no word on any other casualties in the firefight.

U.S. servicemen on the ground in the area "had been taking sniper fire off and on for days," the official said.

In the past several days, the Marines have become far more aggressive in terms of dealing with Somali gunmen and their weapons and had been conducting arms sweeps in the city.

Prior to the Marine's death, the U.S. military had reported one of their quietest days since they arrived.

ON THE AGENDA

Rain or shine, fee payment continues

"I had to run all over campus to pay delinquencies. That was after I found out they had given my schedule to someone with the same name."

KELLY MURRAY

KARREY BRITT
Collegian

Even though snow and sleet impeded movement outside, fee payment continued as usual.

There was only a slight increase in holding fee payments and schedules compared to past years, University Registrar Don Foster said.

"We had about 150 holds the first day and then about 100 holds the second," Foster said. "This is just slightly more than a typical amount."

Ron Brown, assistant registrar, said the fee payment was typical, even with the bad weather.

"Most of the students were already here during the weekend ready to go to Aggieville," Brown said.

Many students said fee payment went as usual with the discouragement of delinquency fees, waiting and lost schedules.

"I had to run all over campus to pay delinquencies," Kelly Murray, freshman undecided, said. "This was after I found out they had given my schedule to someone else with the same name."

Amy Cartwright, freshman in education, said she was tired of hassling with paying parking fees and waiting in line to pay them.

Finding a parking space was also a problem, said Melissa Ridgway, freshman in apparel and textile marketing.

Doug Ackley, assistant controller for cashiering and student loans, said a mailing fee is set to go into effect fall 1994, which would help eliminate the fee payment hassle.

"The mailing fee is definitely in our future, but we are only in the discussion stage now," he said.

Ackley said students will not have have to go to Ahearn Field House to pay fees with the mail-in system. Fees, however, would need to be paid prior to classes beginning, he said.

"Right now, we are working really hard on combining financial aid and enrollment electronically together," Ackley said. "Hopefully, we will have this done next fall, which will make things easier."

Traveling meetings aim to please, seek citizens' perspective on local issues

WADE SISSON

Department managers for the city of Manhattan are hoping to let city residents help set this year's agenda.

City Manager Jim Pearson has organized a series of community listening tours between the city staff and the citizens of Manhattan.

"I thought of the idea to kick off the year by getting the city staff to hear from the people on a turf other than City Hall," Pearson said.

The first of five listening tours convened at 7 p.m. Monday at the Holiday Inn and Holidome.

Mayor Richard Seidler told those in attendance that Pearson was hired with city management's accessibility to the citizens in mind.

"He took that one step further," Mayor Seidler said. "He asked the department heads to do the same."

City staff members representing the Department of Parks and Recreation and Manhattan Fire Services were among those on hand to speak with the citizens.

"My intent was to simply put the city staff members outside of City Hall for people to talk with them," Pearson said. "There is no set agenda and no expected outcomes."

Due in part to icy road conditions, attendance was low.

The eight citizens in attendance were encouraged to talk individually with the city staff members.

To aid the discussions, displays on Manhattan Fire Services, Municipal Airport, land use plans, siren locations and parks were placed throughout the room.

The main issue discussed was the Americans with Disabilities Act of 1990, Pearson said.

"It (the listening tour) is a great first step, but the other foot is in the air," Paul Palenske, a disabled Manhattan resident and researcher for Handicapped People Obligated to Equality (HOPE), a non-profit organization in Manhattan.

For Palenske, the next step is to involve the school districts, K-State and Fort Riley in the listening tours.

The tours will continue throughout this month, and the results will help shape the 1993 City Commission agenda, Pearson said.

"I feel that if we have the opportunity to talk on this level, much more can be communicated than at City Commission meetings," Pearson said. "We can hear more issues than opinions."

KSU attorney loses battle with cancer

MEGAN MULLIKIN
Collegian

K-State's Associate University Attorney Dorothy Thompson died Dec. 11 after a bout with cancer. She has worked with the University for more than 20 years.

University Attorney Richard Seaton described Thompson as a determined lawyer who was heavily relied on by the University's administration and many others on campus.

"She was one of these unusually calm but determined people. She could discuss and work out problems without compromising her principles or inflaming the other side," Seaton said. "Dorothy became an invaluable resource of advice for administrators because of her strong personality qualities."

Thompson pioneered the K-State's affirmative action program, was active on the University AIDS committee and was a leader and supporter of many professional women's groups in the community and on campus.

"She had a great perception of how a university works. She brought civil rights a long way, mostly through her own incentives. She also went a long way with internal education regarding legal matters and policy within the University," Provost James Coffman said.

Thompson worked with the private law firm of Everett, Seaton, Knopp and Thompson and as assistant to the University vice president for academic affairs, where she developed the affirmative action program before becoming associate University attorney.

Thompson was president of the Riley County Bar Association in 1990 and was admitted to practice before the U.S. Supreme Court the same year.

Thompson is survived by her husband Charles Thompson, a K-State psychology professor, and sons Eric Thompson of Seattle and Brett Thompson of Manhattan.

A memorial fund has been established with the KSU Foundation for the Dorothy Thompson Scholarship Fund. Contributions may be left in care of the Edwards-Yorgensen-Meloan Funeral Home.

Grand jury clears Virginia senator

ASSOCIATED PRESS

NORFOLK, Va. — A federal grand jury Tuesday refused to indict Sen. Charles Robb in a political eavesdropping scheme targeted at Democratic rival Gov. L. Douglas Wilder.

But a Robb acquaintance, Bruce Thompson, was indicted on three counts related to the case, and that indictment alleged Robb's staff kept Robb informed about efforts to discredit people considered unfriendly to him.

Thompson's indictment also alleged that Robb ordered an aide to lie to the media about how his office obtained the Wilder tape.

The outcome of the panel's 18-month investigation was announced by the Justice Department in Washington.

Robb had denied any wrongdoing connected to the illegal taping of a car-phone conversation between Wilder and a political supporter.

In a news conference in Washington, Robb thanked the grand jurors.

"Ultimately, the system worked, and the grand jury fulfilled its historical role to serve not only as a sword, but also as a shield, to protect citizens from unjust prosecution," he said. "It never entered my mind that this matter could get this far, or that the system could be so abused."

Robb said he will seek re-election in two years but said the case hurt his reputation. He ques-tioned whether a U.S. attorney should have "unfettered power to destroy" someone under inves-tigation.

Assistant U.S. Attorney Robert Wiechering, who led the investigation, said "The grand jury has made their decision here, and I respect that."

Thompson, a Virginia beach businessman, has been identified in news reports as the man who gave Robb aides the tape of an illegally recorded telephone conversation of Wilder.

Thompson was accused in the indictment of violating federal communications law and trying to get the man who recorded Wilder's call to lie about his knowledge of the matter.

During the 1988 conversation, Wilder — then the state's lieutenant governor — said Robb's political career had been ruined by published reports that he had attended cocaine parties while he was governor from 1982 to 1986.

Robb denied attending parties where cocaine was used and won election to the Senate in 1988 by a landslide.

Robb and Wilder have feuded for years.

Lisa Katz, a spokeswoman for Wilder, said the governor would have no comment on the grand jury's action.

After a transcript of the tape was provided to newspapers in the summer of 1991, the grand jury launched an investigation.

Robb testified before the grand jury in August 1991, acknowledging he knew of the tape's contents but saying he ordered his staff not to release it. He appeared before the panel again in December, telling reporters afterward that he expected to be indicted.

Three former Robb aides pleaded guilty.

David McCloud, Robb's former chief of staff, pleaded guilty in May to three criminal charges.

In a plea agreement to a misdemeanor and two infractions, McCloud admitted to conspiring to falsely report campaign expenditures, a misdemeanor, and conspiring to disclose and use the contents of the Wilder tape.

He was fined $10,000 on the infractions, which are less serious than a misdemeanor. McCloud, a top aide to Robb as far back as the senator's term as governor from 1982 to 1986, was sentenced to four months probation on the misdemeanor.

▶Mandela to attend inauguration

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — ANC leader Nelson Mandela will attend next week's inauguration of President-elect Clinton, the African National Congress said Tuesday.

President F.W. de Klerk will remain in South Africa because of other commitments, his office said.

South Africa commentators predict Clinton will be more sympathetic to the ANC than President Bush, who offered more or less equal praise for Mandela and de Klerk.

THE ISSUE

In the past few weeks, Iraq has made a habit of ignoring many cease-fire restrictions, with little but veiled threats in the way of reprimand.

WE SUGGEST

The United Nations must stop issuing veiled threats to Iraq and start taking action.

Iraq, the stubborn brat of this global nursery school is at it again, pulling the pigtails of an exasperated United Nations. Now it seems that everyone is wondering when Saddam Hussein's mother is going to show up to take him off our hands.

It's been a busy January at the playground.

Last week, the United States scolded Hussein when he lined up anti-aircraft batteries along the 32nd parallel, the strictly enforced "no-fly" zone established by U.S.-led allies to protect southern Shiite Muslims from harassment. Iraq briefly balked, but then seemingly backed down.

Before anyone could pat himself on the back for a threat well veiled, Iraq was already making trouble over at the sandbox. Tuesday, about 150 unarmed Iraqis in civilian clothes made a third consecutive trip into disputed territory to retrieve equipment, including four anti-ship Silkworm missiles, from an Iraqi-built naval base.

While the United Nations grimly protests these flagrant violations of the Persian Gulf War cease-fire, Iraq executes an artful nose-thumbing in the teacher's direction.

Now, U.S. officials claim that when pesky Hussein gave in on the anti-aircraft battery issue, he merely transferred the artillery to the "no-fly" zone located at the northern 36th parallel.

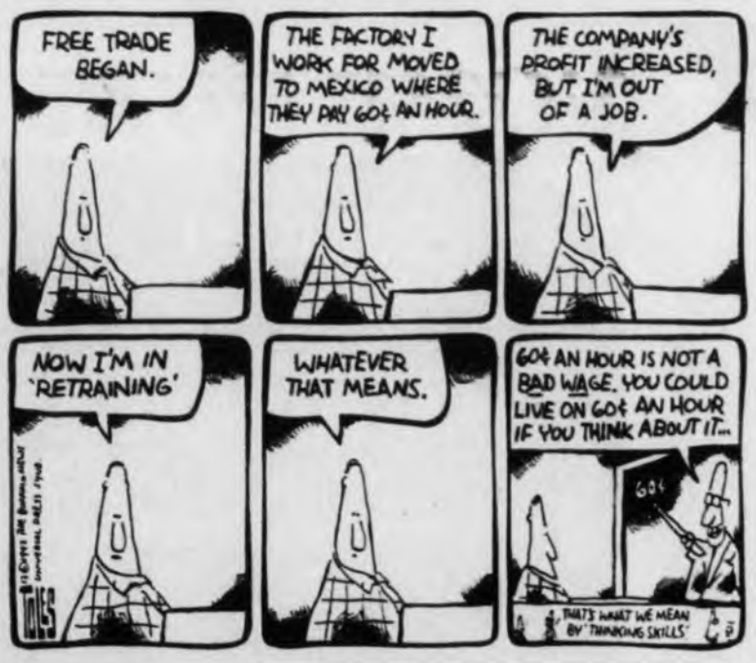
The latest of the tantrums revolves around Iraq's latest refusal to allow U.N. weapons inspectors to fly non-Iraqi aircraft into the country. Today, U.N. officials may resubmit flight plans to the Iraqi government for transporting weapons inspectors. If Iraq again refuses to comply, many feel that playtime will be over.

"The situation is too explosive to play irresponsible games," Russian Foreign Affairs Ministry spokesman Sergei Yastrzhembsky said.

"Irresponsible games" is a good term. Iraq has been mollycoddled for far too long. It has become far too adept at pushing the envelope of authority, backing off in the nick of time, then provoking again.

Like the pre-school protagonist, Iraq needs to find out the dire consequences of such brazen contempt and, unless it agrees to abide by the strictest of existing U.N. regulations, it should find out soon.

It's time for the allies of the Persian Gulf War to make Saddam Hussein and Iraq sit in the corner.



And to make sure they stay there.

TOLES

Skip and go naked

People make assumptions about our character by how we clothe our bodies. A man with long hair — liberal. A woman with combat boots — radical and separatist.

KELLY KLAWONN

As far as legs go, I guess his weren't too bad. A little hairy for my taste, but still shapely and toned.

Excitement and thrills are somewhat of a rarity in a Nebraska copy store, so a 60-year-old man in a mini-skirt is quite a thrill.

The summer months mean a simple cotton number cut just above the knee. The winter months mean the donning of denim and some leggings for added warmth — Nebraska winters are a bit nippy.

While his legs were something to behold, it was his willingness to abandon the norm that we all really admired. More than anything else, clothing is what separates men from women. Our clothing defines the masculine and feminine.

Women wear skirts and dresses. Feminine. Men wear suits and ties. Masculine. The cross-over of gender-specific clothing is a slow and often times hard fought process.

Today women wear pants, ties and boxer underwear, without as much as a turn of the head. Men can get by with long hair and pierced ears to the dismay of only a few curious onlookers.

The way we dress says a lot about they way we are expected to behave. When I wear a dress — heaven help me — visions of the Miss America Pageant run through my head, and an overwhelming urge to read Jane Austen novels consumes me. I don't mind typical "women's clothing," but it is the imagery and connotations that coincide with a way of dressing that are troublesome.

People make assumptions about our character by how we clothe our bodies. A man with long hair — liberal. A woman with combat boots — radical and separatist.

Clothing and appearance are a means of control. Think of all those eager college students who scrub themselves up, comb their hair and put on that new "power" suit or dress for the all-important job interview. If they don't follow the steps of proper attire, they are considered wild or outrageous and will most likely not get the job.

There was a time earlier this century when women would dress and behave like men everyday. There were two basic motivations for this behavior — either they enjoyed activities that were typically male — hunting, working or smoking — or they wanted to have a lesbian relationship, and it was virtually impossible to develop such a relationship in their society.

Upon discovery of such a woman, Caroline Hall, the Oct. 1, 1901, issue of the New York Times said Ms. Hall's reason for dressing as a man was that "women were not afforded as many opportunities in the world as men ... and after brooding for some time over the disadvantages of being a woman, she decided to adopt male attire."

Sure, this was some 92 years ago, and today is the time of unisex clothing, men with long hair and women who don't shave their legs and armpits. But we also have snickers and strange looks to accompany these pioneers of change.

Just last week on "Donahue," there were four men who dressed as women because it helped further their careers. One man was a singer who happened to have a high voice for a man. When he dressed in a historically male fashion, people would either heckle or leave upon discovery of the the man's gender. When he began dressing in a historically female fashion, he got more work and more well-behaved audiences. Nothing changed except his outward appearance, and that changed everything.

Clothing has become so closely tied to a gender and a specific set of behaviors that we can't separate the person from the fabric.

Our environment requires clothing. Our culture created labels. Since nudity is not an option, I say strap on your combat boots, my sisters, and prepare for battle. To my brothers, I say put another hoop in your ear. And to the man in the skirt, I say you got great legs.

Colorado's Amendment 2 may endanger gay inmates

ASSOCIATED PRESS

DENVER — Denver's manager of safety indicated Tuesday that the Denver jail might have to put gay inmates at risk by no longer segregating them from other prisoners if Amendment 2 is allowed to take effect.

Safety manager John Simonet testified before Denver District Judge Jeffrey Bayless, who has been asked to issue an injunction barring the controversial anti-gay-protection amendment approved by Colorado voters from taking effect Friday.

He said gay inmates now have the option of choosing to be segregated from the rest of the jail population, but Amendment 2 "would put a number of people at risk."

"Jails have a predatory population. Most likely the general population would prey or pick on homosexuals," he said.

Also testifying Tuesday were some of the eight gays and lesbians who filed the lawsuit challenging Amendment 2. One expressed growing concern about his personal safety since the amendment was approved, and another said the careers of gays and lesbians in state government could be derailed if Amendment 2 is permitted to take effect.

And Aspen's mayor said Aspen — which along with Denver and Boulder have gay-protection ordinances on the books — will continue to enforce its anti-gay-discrimination ordinance, enacted in 1977, until Amendment 2 becomes law.

The ordinance "reflects the humanistic tradition and lifestyle in Aspen," Mayor John Bennett said. "It's been extremely effective. ... My fear is discrimination would raise its head once again in Aspen."

Promising to rule on the injunction request before Friday, Bayless is hearing testimony from gay and lesbian leaders and from attorneys for the state of Colorado who are defending passage of Amendment 2.

Attorneys for nine plaintiffs — eight are gays or lesbians, and one is a heterosexual with AIDS — filed a lawsuit challenging Amendment 2 shortly after it was approved. Now, they and other Amendment 2 foes want Bayless to bar the measure from taking effect until the lawsuit against it is heard, probably sometime this summer.

Amendment 2, approved by Colorado voters Nov. 3, makes it illegal to pass a law protecting homosexuals from discrimination and annuls gay-protection ordinances in effect in Denver, Boulder and Aspen.

The hearing, which began Monday and may continue into Wednesday, has become somewhat of a forum on the role of homosexuals in society and whether homosexuality is a product of genetics or environment or both. A clinical psychologist, John Gonsoriek, described homosexuals on Monday as one of the nation's largest "minorities."

Amendment 2 opponents claim the measure violates Amendment 14 of the U.S. Constitution, which ensures equal protection under the law.

Spacewalk begins NASA mission

Endeavour's crew rings bell in space to honor Clinton's presidental inauguration

ASSOCIATED PRESS

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. — NASA put finishing touches Tuesday on Endeavour for a shuttle flight that will open the launch year with a spacewalk and satellite delivery and also ring in a new presidential era.

The newest shuttle was scheduled to blast off at 7:52 a.m. Wednesday. Forecasters put the odds of good weather at 70 percent; low clouds were the sole concern.

Endeavour's flight is the first of eight shuttle missions planned for 1993, the same number as last year.

"Although it's a new year, all the old rules still apply and the most important one of those is that we prepare quality products and we execute our procedures such that we enjoy a safe and successful mission," launch director Bob Sieck said.

The highlights of the six-day mission include a spacewalk by two astronauts, the release of a Tracking and Data Relay Satellite, a toy demonstration for elementary students and the ringing of a small replica of the Liberty Bell as part of inauguration festivities.

Barring a launch delay, Endeavour's five astronauts will be sleeping when Bells of Hope peal around the country Sunday evening to mark Bill Clinton's inauguration as president. The crew plans to videotape its bell-ringing in advance, and Mission Control will give the tape to the inauguration committee for broadcast, NASA spokesman Jeff Carr said.

"We want to do anything we can to make it work right for our country, and this is something that we can do to show our support for the Clinton administration for the next four years," shuttle commander John Casper said at a news conference last week.

The crew's main priority in orbit is to eject the $200 million communications satellite from the cargo bay. An attached rocket is to boost the satellite to a 22,300-mile-high orbit, where it will be kept in reserve until NASA needs to replace one of its older Tracking and Data Relay Satellites.

LIBRARY

Farrell receives challenge grant

KARREY BRITT
Collegian

Farrell Library has been awarded a $250,000-challenge grant by the National Endowment for the Humanities research programs.

The NEH grant is to be matched over the next four years by $750,000 in nonfederal funds, raised by Farrell with the assistance of the KSU Foundation for a total of $1 million, Brice Hobrock, dean of libraries, said.

These funds will be used to create an endowment with an annual income of $50,000 that will be devoted to purchasing resources in targeted areas of the humanities, which include history, English literature, modern languages and music history. It will be also used to preserve library materials.

Farrell is required to raise $82,000 by July 3 to receive an $82,000 check matching the amount, he said.

Hobrock said they are receiving donations now, and they are also examining unrestricted donations because the NEH is allowing funds received since 1990 to count on the $82,000 to be raised.

The NEH has set a schedule for Farrell to go by, he said. They are expected to raise $252,000 between Aug. 1, 1993, and July 31, 1994.

Hobrock said that joint efforts by the library staff and humanities faculty members resulted in the grant.

"It has been a two-year process that started in mid-1990," he said. "The library staff and humanity faculty reviewed concepts and submitted the first application, which was turned down in December 1991."

He said they didn't give up and resubmitted an application in 1992.

"We have had a lot of success since the first report," Hobrock said. "The students raised a $5 million-referendum, and we also received the Hale gift of $2 million."

K-State was one of only six recipients of the NEH.

Other recipients were the Huntington Library in California, the American Research Center in Egypt, Indiana University Press, the New York State Education Department and the University of California at Irvine.

Timothy Donoghue, vice provost for research, said challenge grants are extremely helpful to institutions because they leverage non-federal funds. Therefore, they provide long-range improvements in the quality of an institution's research resources or its humanities programs.

Hobrock said this award demonstrates that the humanities at K-State are now recognized at the national level as being quality programs.

"K-State is better known nationally as a science and technology institution," Hobrock said. "Therefore, credibility in the humanities has been somewhat difficult to establish."

Cats looking to continue streak

CRAIG HACKER/Collegian

Deryl Cunningham, K-State center, dunks during the men's basketball practice Tuesday afternoon at Bramlage Coliseum.

SCOTT ABEL
Collegian

The K-State men's basketball team will take a break from Big Eight conference play tonight with a matchup against the 3-8 Northeastern Illinois Golden Eagles at 7:35 p.m. in Bramlage Coliseum.

The game will be a tune-up for the Wildcats' two Big Eight games at home over the three-day weekend — the Colorado Buffaloes and the Kansas Jayhawks.

"Right now, we need the game," Coach Dana Altman said. "They've played some close ball games against some good people.

"We'll get back to Big Eight play soon enough."

With victories over UC-Santa Barbara and Oklahoma State, the Wildcats won back-to-back road games against teams with winning records (a combined 15-1) for the first time in 11 years.

While K-State is statistically ranked last in the conference in shooting percentage, the Cats are ranked first in conference defense, allowing only 65 points a game.

"I think we've made progress in the last four or five games," Altman said. "In the last three games, I've liked our defensive consistency, and I think that's been the most pleasing thing."

Forward Vincent Jackson has hit a hot streak with four consecutive games in double figures, averaging 16.8 points over that stretch.

Jackson has been shooting almost 53 percent from the floor and scored six points in the overtime period at Oklahoma State.

The Golden Eagles, an independent university in Chicago, just became a Division I basketball school in 1990.

The team limps into tonight's game, having dropped all five road games this season, including losses at Arizona State, DePaul and Marquette.

Northeastern Illinois has had a week layoff since its last game, a 76-73 win over Indiana State.

Leading the Golden Eagles are point guard Victor Snipes and forward Reggie Smith.

Snipes was the Division I leader in steals last season, averaging 3.4 a game. He is averaging 2.7 a game so far this year.

"He's very quick, and he gets after the opposition's point guard every time out," Altman said.

"Anthony (Beane), Brian Henson and Brian Gavin are going to have to be very aware, because he's going to take a lot of chances and try to jump in a lot of passing lanes and get his hands on a lot of balls."

Reggie Smith has led the Golden Eagles in scoring eight times this season, and he pumped in 35 points against Arizona State, where he hit five of eight from 3-point range.

With two Big Eight games looming, will it be tough to get the Cats mentally prepared to play against a team that has only won three games this season?

"It sometimes can be difficult," Altman said. "However, I hope our team has learned something from past experiences.

"We're in no position to look by anybody," he said. "We're going to have to play hard and play well defensively."

Upset win over OSU caps road swing

STEVEN ROCK
Collegian

With a 75-62 victory over the Oklahoma State Cowboys in Stillwater on Jan. 9, the Wildcats backed up what they've been saying throughout the season — this team is not just another page out of last year's Wildcat book.

A year ago, K-State lost eight of its 10 away games. Included in the road woes was a 41-point loss at the hands of Lamar and an 11-point first-half performance against the Cowboys.

But the Wildcats embarked on a four-game road swing on Dec. 18 with hopes of dispelling myths that the Cats can't win on the road.

K-State started its holiday break by traveling to Kansas City to play the University of Missouri-Kansas City. The Cats were heavy favorites going into the game, and the Kangaroos were 0-14 in games against the Big Eight.

K-State escaped with a 66-64 victory.

The favored Wildcats fell to the Wichita State Shockers on their second stop of the trip. The Shockers pulled away with a 13-point win despite shooting just 38 percent from the field.

With a loss to the 2-2 Shockers and a two-point win against the 2-4 Kangaroos, concerns that this year's team was another chapter in road futility surfaced.

But Altman would have none of it.

"This was just one game," he said after the loss to WSU. "It's a long season."

The Wildcats turned around and blew 10- and 11-point leads late in the game, eventually falling to Nevada-Reno by a single tally.

That's when the the three-game winning streak began.

In what Mitch Holthus, the Voice of the Wildcats, called a "big, big, big, big, big, big" win, the underdog Cats beat the University of Cal-Santa Barbara on Dec. 30. It was just the eighth time in nine years that a non-conference foe had won in the Thunderdome.

"That was a big win for us — one that we desperately needed," Altman said.

K-State then returned home in what promised to be a challenging game to prepare them for the Big Eight conference — the LaSalle Explorers have reached the NCAA tournament in four of the last five years, including last season.

What the Cats got, however, was a stat-padder. K-State held the Explorers to a Bramlage Coliseum record-low 16 first-half points.

The Wildcats then traveled to Stillwater, the site of last year's nationally televised 72-34 drubbing at the hands of the Cowboys. OSU had won 35 of their previous 36 home games.

K-State trailed by 11 with just more than four minutes to play before reeling off a stunning 14-3 run that sent the game into overtime. Sparked by the Anthony Beane 25-footer with eight seconds to play, which gave the Cats a second life, K-State was perfect in the extra period.

A 15-0 run paralyzed the Cowboys, and Altman had posted what he called the biggest road victory in his Wildcat career. It was, as Holthus said, a "big, big, big, big, big, big" win for K-State.

COLUMN

These guys may not be so bad after all

Like an overlooked present from Grandma you discover when you take down the Christmas tree, the K-State men's basketball team is giving Cat fans an unexpected gift this season.

"Yes, Virginia. They just might contend after all."

With their upset win at Oklahoma State last Saturday, the Wildcats beat a team that had been 6-0 against Altman-coached teams in the last two years.

The victory showed the preseason comments that "this year would be different" was more than lip service by the players.

For Coach Altman, his team's improvement has been steady and comes for one reason — hard work between the games.

"We've been excited for the last month or so because players were working hard," Altman said. "Over Christmas break, we had an opportunity to get some good practices in.

"The benefits from that have come through in the last couple of games. The players' work ethic has been pretty solid, and that hard work has been paying dividends."

SCOTT ABEL

Unfortunately, "work ethic" wasn't a term associated with last year's team. Throw in a couple of head cases — and a hot dog who believed his press clippings — and you end up with last year's 116-75 Lamar game and an 11-point half at Oklahoma State.

But this year's squad believes in the hard-work formula, something that newcomer Anthony Beane has helped improve.

"Anthony's biggest contribution to our basketball team is one you don't get to see, because he makes it at practice every day," Altman said.

"He comes and works hard, and that has helped our team because everybody watches him. That has meant a great deal to our program because of that work ethic."

This season's team has been a hard sell to K-State fans, as preseason predictions of another cellar-dwelling year and a weak non-conference schedule have taken their toll.

The crickets have had plenty of breathing room. Bramlage Coliseum has been averaging only 5,442 fans a game, about 8,000 less than capacity, and a Bramlage low of 5,013 saw the overtime win against Ohio University.

As of yesterday, there were still several hundred tickets left for Monday's game against the Jayhawks, something that is about as rare at K-State as an athletic director that stays longer than a junior college transfer.

And there are still a lot of questions for this team to answer if it wants to fill those empty seats.

The departure of Sean Robbins, the outside specialist that transferred from Emporia State and then abruptly transferred back, has left the shooting guard position dangerously thin.

Askia Jones' shooting touch still hasn't shown up this season, which has magnified that weakness.

So far Jones is averaging only 39 percent from the field and only 23 percent from 3-point range.

Without Jones as a serious outside threat, K-State has only one consistent outside scorer in Brian Henson, a situation that will make inside scoring even more difficult against the larger front lines in the conference.

But the last three games, the Cats have shown something that a lot of people didn't expect in the cold January nights — that they "could be someboday" — they "could be a contenda."

WOMEN'S HOOPS

Conference losses drop Lady Cats to 7-4 mark

But squad won tourney during semester break

BRIAN ANDERSON
Collegian

The record of the K-State women's basketball team dropped to 7-4 during the semester break.

The Lady Cats suffered four losses in seven games during the semester break, including two road losses this past weekend to nationally-ranked Colorado and Missouri.

Despite the losses, the Lady Cats captured the Holiday Inn Basketball Beach Blast on Jan. 3 in Wilmington, N.C., with three K-Staters named to the all-tournament team.

No. 6 Colorado handled the Lady Cats Jan. 8 in Boulder 61-33. The experienced Lady Buffaloes, who improved to 13-0, started four seniors and last year's Newcomer of the Year against K-State.

"It was a very disappointing loss for the reason that we were lackadaisical in our effort," Coach Susan Yow said. "That was very discouraging for us. We didn't have a fighter's mentality."

Colorado forced K-State into 34 turnovers and outrebounded the Lady Cats by a 40-26 margin, despite being held 19 points below its game average.

"I felt both teams played strong defensively and were flat offensively," Yow said. "The bad thing about that ball game was that we had a lackluster mentality. Lackluster mentality leads to a poor performance."

Turnovers played a part in Sunday's loss at Missouri for the Lady Cats as the 9-1 Lady Tigers beat K-State 62-49.

"What hurt us was that we had 21 turnovers," Yow said of the Missouri game. "I am proud of the effort in the game. We held Missouri eight points below its game average. Plus, they were averaging 46 rebounds a game. We held them to 33."

The Lady Cats opened the new year in North Carolina by beating New Hampshire and host UNC-Wilmington to take the Holiday Inn Basketball Beach Blast.

"Anytime you win a tournament, it's a nice feat," Yow said. "We had to play the host school to win it, and we had to play the team coming in that had the best record from the previous year and had the most experienced team."

Four Lady Cats scored in double figures, and the team shot 57 percent from the field to beat New Hampshire 69-60. Senior forward Leah Honeycutt led the squad in scoring with 16 points.

Sophomore forward Shanele Stires had 19 points and 18 rebounds in the championship game to help the Lady Cats beat UNC-Wilmington 69-51. Senior guard Kelly Moylan had 19 points, while Honeycutt and sophomore forward JoMoree Grattan had 11 and 10 points.

Stires was named Most Valuable Player of the tournament, collecting 32 points and 27 rebounds in the two games.

"It's nice to be recognized," Stires said of the honor. "The MVP thing is just something that happened."

K-State started the semester break with a 75-55 win over Missouri Western State on Dec. 19 at Bramlage Coliseum before losing two home games to Illinois-Chicago and Minnesota.

Primarily, Yow said her team needs to improve on its ball-handling and cutting down its number of turnovers.

"We've got to cut down on turnovers," Yow said. "We've got to get them out of the twenties and into the teens.

"I'd like to see our turnovers get to 16 or less."

Stoltz leaves K-State

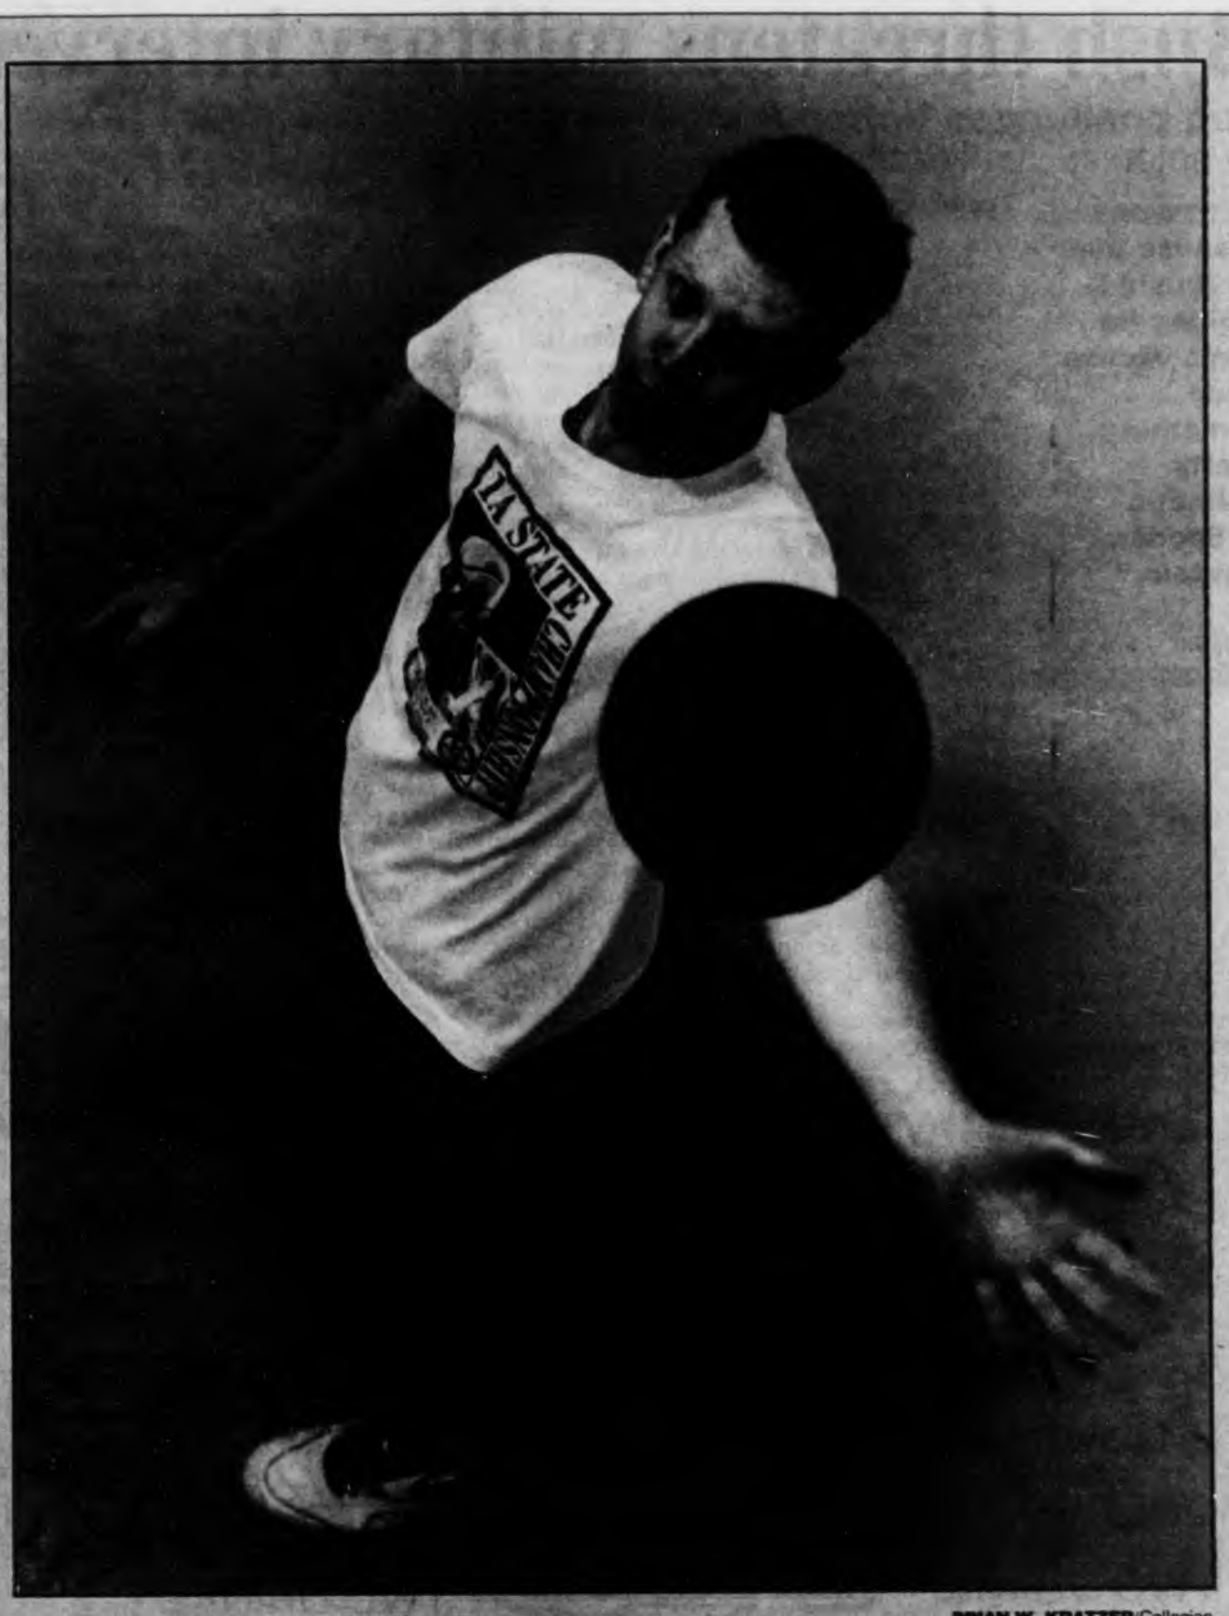
Lady Cat Pam Stoltz announced Tuesday that she has chosen to leave K-State and return to her home in Minnesota.

Stoltz cited personal reasons as the driving force behind her decision. She said she had never fully adjusted to the demands as a collegiate basketball player or to being so far away from family and friends.

"This was a very hard decision for me to make, and the coaching staff has been very supportive of me during this time," Stoltz said. "I feel that to leave K-State is the best thing for me to do right now."

The 6-foot-1-inch sophomore forward, who joined the Lady Cat squad during the 1991-92 season, played in every game this season and was averaging 2.2 points and 3.4 rebounds per contest.

A year ago, Stoltz averaged 5.3 points and 4.3 rebounds a game. She appeared in 25 of the Lady Cats' 28 games. Her best game was a 13-point, 15-rebound performance against Oklahoma State.



Head coach Susan Yow said she was disappointed to learn of Stoltz's decision.

"It is extremely hard when a player leaves your program, especially one that has contributed early in a big way," she said.

"I'm sorry to see her go, but for her sake, I think it is in her best interest."

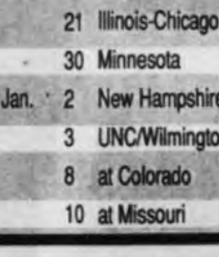
Richards' 16-month tenure ends; 'philosophical differences' cited



Outgoing AD not specifying what the differences were

STEVEN ROCK
Collegian

"I am going to be at K-State for a very long time," first-year K-State athletic director Milt Richards said.

That was Jan. 21, 1992, after he had been on the job for five months.

That time ended on Jan. 5 of this year, when Richards announced his resignation. He cited philosophical differences — differences that, more than a week later, have not been revealed.

Richards

"You're going to want to know what the philosophical differences are," he said, "and I'm not going to tell you.

"I'm a professional. When you get to a point when you're not agreeing with the people you're working for, you've got a decision to make — you can stay and be miserable, you can do whatever they tell you to do, or you can move on.

"I chose to move on."

And even though Richards' resignation comes less than 17 months after he was hired, pressure from alumni concerning his resignation has been steadily increasing, K-State president Jon Wefald said.

"Countless thousands of alums, as they met Milt within the first four to six weeks, felt that it wasn't a fit," Wefald said. "It was their immediate instinct. I heard about that from day one.

"Instead of it diminishing, it built. And that's the key."

Wefald said that Wildcat alumni would rather see an individual with K-State ties in the position of athletic director. Richards came from Temple University in Philadelphia, where he had been the associate athletic director for six years.

"In an athletic department, the AD, in addition to representing the day-to-day operations, represents an image, a history, a tradition," Wefald said, "and I think that's where the rub came.

"I heard about that from day one — this urban person, this East Coast person, isn't going to be able to relate to K-Staters."

Was this considered when Richards was hired?

Wefald said that the $5.2-million debt that was left behind by Steve Miller, who resigned to take a position with Nike, needed to be dealt with.

"Steve had the charm, the personality and the charisma," Wefald said, "but on the other hand, maybe he didn't carefully watch internal procedures, budgets, expenditures versus revenues, and this kind of thing. When he left, what we wanted was somebody who would put a great emphasis on a balanced budget.

"And that's probably why we focused in on Milt, because internally, that's what he had done at Temple."

Before Richards resigned, he was able to do precisely what he was asked — balance the athletic budget. For the 1992 fiscal year, the Wildcat budget report indicated that the department operated in the black — $265,000 to be exact — for the first time in seven years.

"I'm most proud that I leave the department, I believe, in better shape than when I came in," Richards said.

"What I want people to remember about Milt Richards is that he came in and got the fiscal house going."

The athletic department raised enough money last year during Richards' tenure to enable the university to begin construction of a new press box at the football stadium. It was also able to build a new indoor practice facility.

There has been speculation that there was pressure, from both the administration and the alumni, that led to Richards' decision to leave the University.

"I bet you could count up six to eight different sources," Wefald said. "Alumni, the Foundation, Catbacker clubs, alumni clubs and just alumni out there — people would write a letter, maybe call me or Milt, 'Shape up. You're not doing this, you're not doing that.'

"It came down to a matter of style, personality and the ability to win friends for the department."

But in Richards' case, Wefald said, that ability never quite blossomed, and the solution became obvious.

"It became clear to Milt, and it became apparent to me. I would say it was a mutual decision."

As part of the agreement, K-State has agreed to pay the balance of Richards' three-year contract, of which a year-and-a-half remains. His annual salary is near $85,000.

"The thing you have to understand," Richards said, "is that when you're the director of athletics at a place like K-State, there's pressures everyday.

"All I'm going to say is that I resigned because of philosophical differences with the University's administration."

STEVEN ROCK
Collegian

He came to the door wearing a head-to-toe purple sweat suit.

"Come in, my friend," he said, a smile on his face and no shoes on his feet.

Indeed, this did not seem like the same man who, only one day earlier, had announced his resignation as the athletic director at K-State.

Milt Richards ended his 16-month tenure as the Wildcat athletic director on Jan. 5, citing "philosophical differences with the University's administration."

But after the original bomb had been dropped, and the phone began ringing off the hook — he eventually took it off the hook during our interview — he maintained that things, for him, were moving in the right direction.

"I love Kansas State," Richards said. "I had not gotten to the point where I was unhappy, and I'll have nothing but fond memories of K-State.

"It was just time to move on."

But not before he balanced the athletic budget for the first time since 1985. Not before he instituted fund-raising projects that enabled K-State to work on renovations of the baseball and track stadiums.

And not before the athletic department raised $1.3 million, the largest amount ever at K-State.

"I really appreciate some of the accomplishments he and his staff were able to accomplish," Bob Krause, K-State vice president, said. "But he needs to get on with his career, and K-State needs to get on with its business."

Richards, 33, was originally hired by K-State because of his background in athletic business administration. He earned three degrees from West Virginia University, including a doctorate in 1983.

He came to K-State and inherited a $5.2 million debt, the legacy of Steve Miller.

Richards spent nine years at Temple University. For four of those years, he was the chief financial officer in charge of a $10 million-budget.

But Richards never gained widespread support from Wildcat alumni, and this, coupled with the omnipotent "philosophical differences," was cited as the driving force behind his resignation.

"We hoped that, given the fact that he's a smart young man, he could realize the other characteristics that are necessary in order to demonstrate your ability to work on the outside," K-State president Jon Wefald said.

That didn't happen.

"I like him," Wefald said. "I think he likes me. It was just one of those things that wasn't meant to be.

"Maybe in a different environment — I know in a different environment — he could do a good job for somebody.

"And we're going to do everything we can to help Milt."

Wefald said a letter of recommendation has already been written for Richards.

"I wanted to do what was best for K-State and Milt Richards and his family," Richards said of his wife and two children.

In the meantime, Richards said he has already received several phone calls.

"There are a few things in the works," he said. "I've heard from several institutions. I'm just going to kind of sit back and see what happens. It's too bad the weather hasn't been better — I could be playing some golf.

"I've got a lot of time on my hands right now."

Bush threatens military intervention

Iraq challenges United States by entering "no-fly zones"

"I sense that he (Bush) is looking for some excuse to do something pretty dramatic to Saddam Hussein."

VICE ADMIRAL HENRY G. SUMMERS

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — The Bush administration Tuesday declared Iraq's fresh incursions into disputed territory "a matter of extreme concern" and said there would be no further warnings before possible military retaliation for threatening moves by Saddam Hussein.

Presidential spokesman Marlin Fitzwater denounced Baghdad's actions after Iraqi work crews — for the third time in as many days — entered contested territory along the Kuwaiti border to remove equipment from a naval base.

In addition, U.S. officials said Iraq was shifting anti-aircraft missile batteries around in both its southern and northern "no-fly zones" — areas in which the United States and its allies have banned military flights — in an apparent effort to confuse and provoke the allied jets flying patrols there.

In Little Rock, Ark, a spokesman for President-elect Clinton said Saddam could be setting up a quick test for Bush's successor.

"It would be unwise of him to underestimate President-elect Clinton," said communications director George Stephanopoulos.

In the waning days of the Bush administration, officials at the White House and Pentagon were showing little patience.

"The warning that we gave still stands," said Pentagon spokesman Bob Hall. "We won't tolerate any interference with our ability to enforce the no-fly zone. And if we make a judgment that some Iraqi action interferes with that ability, we'll take the appropriate action."

Hall called the missiles "a potential threat to our aircraft."

Some military experts suggested Saddam had opened the door for Bush to strike one more blow at the Iraqi ruler.

"I sense that he (Bush) is looking for some excuse to do something pretty dramatic to Saddam Hussein," said retired Vice Adm. Henry C. Mustin, former deputy chief of Naval Operations.

"I can't imagine Saddam Hussein would be stupid enough to push him at this particular time," said Col. Harry G. Summers Jr., an analyst at the Army War College. "Bush has everything to gain and nothing to lose."

At the White House, Fitzwater told reporters, "There is a clear pattern of violation, whether it's missiles or these raids into warehouses or other actions they've taken."

"It remains to be seen exactly what may come of that, but as we said, there will be no warnings," he said, speaking of any potential U.S. military retaliation.

The U.N. Security Council on Monday night condemned the border raids.

In an interview with "Fox Morning News," Fitzwater said the U.N. action "really put the world community on record in saying this is not acceptable. We are now in a position of watching to see how he may proceed from here. But it is a matter of extreme concern."

At the State Department, spokesman Joseph Snyder said the U.N. resolution "lays the foundation for action by the council or member states" in response to Iraqi violations of the cease-fire resolutions, which were put in place after the end of the Gulf War.

"The possible use of force is not excluded," he said, adding this was how the United States interpreted the resolution. "We got a statement last night that we're very happy with."

Wildcats improve record to 8-2

But the Cats are far from perfect.

K-State is still ranked dead last in the Big Eight in field-goal percentage, connecting on just 46.2 percent of its shots.

Last season's leading scorer, swing man Askia Jones, is still mired in a season-long slump. He's shooting 39 percent from the field and 23 percent from 3-point range.

But the Cats are riding a three-game winning streak, and Altman said it may well be the best three-game stretch in his K-State coaching career.

"I think our hard work is paying its dividends right now," he said.

Racial harmony matters to students

Results of study hearten California researchers

ASSOCIATED PRESS

LOS ANGELES — Promoting racial harmony is important to college freshmen, according to a survey.

Forty-two percent of college freshmen surveyed by the University of California, Los Angeles, said that "helping to promote racial understanding" was an essential or very important goal, an increase of 8 percentage points over 1991 .

The survey is conducted annually by UCLA's Higher Education Research Institute and the American Council on Education. More than 300,000 students at 606 schools were asked to fill out questionnaires involving their lifestyles, attitudes and backgrounds.

This year, a record 66 percent said they had performed volunteer work in the past year.

"These findings suggest that students today are substantially more committed to serving their communities and to working for social and political change than were students who entered college just a few years ago," said Alexander Astin, the survey's founding director.

A third of freshmen said working in community leadership was very important or essential. At black colleges more than half the freshmen felt the same.

A quarter of the respondents said they frequently discuss politics, but only 7.3 percent said they worked in a local, state or national political campaign in 1992.

The study also revealed gaps between male and female attitudes on social issues.

One-fourth of students continued to believe the activities of married women are "best confined to home and family." Nearly one in three men agreed with that statement. Only about one in five women concurred.

When asked about sexual relations between consenting adults, a record low of 44 percent agreed "if two people really like each other, it's all right for them to have sex even if they've known each other only for a very short time." Three years ago, 60 percent felt that way.

MUSIC

Thousands gather to pay tribute to jazz king

Memorial service for Dizzy Gillespie has much music, many laughs, few tears

ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — It wasn't hard to spot Dizzy Gillespie among the 5,000 people at his own memorial service.

The late jazz legend was omnipresent — in the music played, the humor displayed, the mannerisms and verve of the musicians and the warmth of spirit that enveloped the huge gothic expanse of the Cathedral of St. John the Divine.

There were few tears at Tuesday's memorial, a New Orleans-style jazz sendoff that celebrated Gillespie's life more than it mourned his death last Wednesday at 75.

"Today's not meant to be a memorial to someone who's departed," said Gillespie's lawyer and longtime friend, Elliot Hoffman, who led the service. "So much of Dizzy is still here."

The interdenominational service began with a blues processional up the center aisle. It was led by Wynton Marsalis, the most prominent young inheritor of Gillespie's trumpet legacy.

He was followed by honorary pallbearers who included jazz stars George Shearing, Jon Faddis, Slide Hampton, Milt Hinton, Chuck Mangione, Jimmy Heath, Ray Brown, Milt Jackson, Paquito D'Rivera and Clark Terry, among many others.

Private services for Gillespie — who helped create the bebop style of jazz and whose trademarks were his bulging cheeks, his bent horn and his clowning around — were held Saturday.

Tuesday's service consisted largely of reminiscences, many of them humorous, interspersed with some of the songs that are Gillespie's legacy, including "Con Alma," "Tin Tin Deo" and "A Night in Tunisia."

Thelonious Monk Jr., the son of the late pianist and composer, read a message from President-elect Clinton, who said, "America and the world have lost one of the creative geniuses of the 20th century."

D'Rivera, a saxophonist, was among the many musicians who credited Gillespie with nurturing his early career.

CIA correct in firing of gay spy, court says

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — The CIA's firing of a gay spy on grounds that he posed a threat to national security was upheld Tuesday by a federal appellate court.

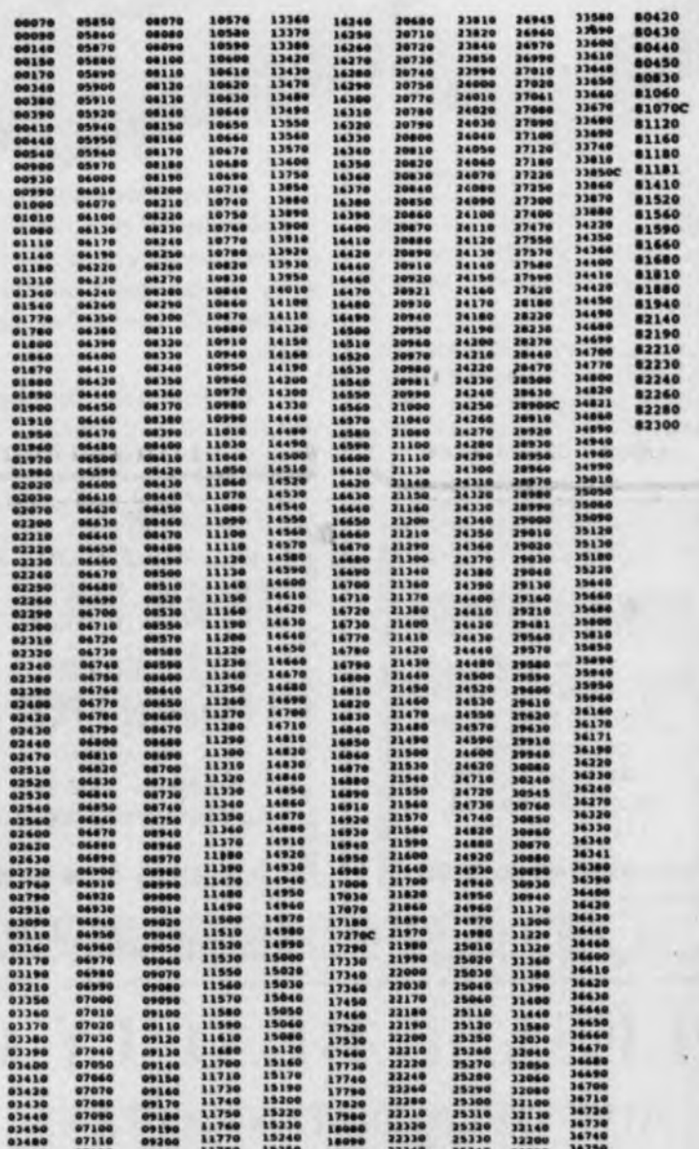
A three-judge panel of the U.S. Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia said the CIA had a legitimate concern about the spy's "trustworthiness in light of the fact that he hid information about his involvement in homosexual activity despite suspecting or knowing that the agency considered such involvement to be a matter of security significance."

The appeals court overturned a federal judge's ruling that the spy, identified in court papers only by the fictitious name John Doe, was denied due process when CIA Director William Casey fired him 1982.

Doe joined the CIA in 1973 as a clerk typist and worked his way up to a covert job as an electronics technician, in which he was rated as an excellent agent.

Fearing that he might be fired, he told a CIA security official in January 1982 that he was gay, that his family, neighbors and friends knew he was homosexual, but that he had never revealed any classified information to an unauthorized person.

He was placed on paid leave pending an investigation and was told in May he was being fired "in the interests of the United States." After the CIA rejected his appeal, Doe sued the agency in federal court, contending he was fired because he was gay.



When the case reached the Supreme Court six years later, the CIA denied having a blanket policy against homosexuals. But the Reagan administration contended that the CIA director had the discretion under the 1947 National Security Act to dismiss any employee deemed a security risk "without giving reasons."

The justices disagreed. They said courts could intervene if a CIA agent was denied equal protection and property rights under the Constitution. They sent the case back to lower courts.

In 1991, a district judge ruled in Doe's favor, saying statements from other employees and the CIA's handbook created an "agency-fostered understanding" that he would enjoy continued employment as long as his services were needed and his work was well done.

LEGISLATURE

GOP criticizes Finney's State of the State address

ASSOCIATED PRESS

TOPEKA — Republican legislative leaders said Gov. Joan Finney's State of the State address on Tuesday was bland and lacked specific goals, while Democrats praised her proposed budget as realistic.

Rep. Rochelle Chronister, R-Neodesha, chairwoman of the House Appropriations Committee, said Finney's speech lacked a theme for the next two years.

"It's difficult really to say what it is that is really going on with the governor's budget at this point," Chronister said. "A lot of governors have a clearer view of what it is they would really like to see for people in Kansas."

Finney, a Democrat, told legislators they must help prepare the state for the next century, but Republican leaders complained that she provided few details. They also said the ideas she outlined already have been proposed or studied by the Legislature.

Legislators interrupted Finney's speech with applause 10 times. Each time, Democrats began clapping and Republicans joined in with limited applause.

Sen. Gus Bogina, R-Shawnee, chairman of the Senate Ways and Means Committee, called Finney's 21-minute speech "vanilla ice cream."

GOP leaders also were skeptical of Finney's proposed $6.65-billion budget for fiscal year 1994, which begins July 1. They said they have doubts about whether her proposals — most notably a generous pay increase for state employees — can be financed with existing revenues.

"I think what she said was very nice, and I agree with all of it, but I don't know how she plans to accomplish it," Bogina said.

House Speaker Bob Miller, R-Wellington,said, "I didn't hear anything new in the non-budget items at all."

But Democrats expressed satisfaction with the governor's proposed budget and her speech.

Senate Minority Leader Jerry Karr, D-Emporia, called Finney's remarks a "bread-and-butter speech" and "tight and not dramatic."

House Minority Leader Tom Sawyer, D-Wichita, said the budget was progressive and the governor had done a masterful job of putting it together.

"Although the governor has stated that she would be satisfied to stay the course, it seems she is not going to back away from the major issues facing the Legislature this session," Sawyer said.

Republican leaders said they were disappointed that Finney was not more specific in her speech about workers' compensation issues. Legislative leaders have made reforming workers' compensation laws a top priority because of continued increases in insurance premiums paid by businesses.

Finney noted the problem and said the state must make work places safer and businesses more competitive, while striving to retain benefits for injured workers. However, she was not more specific.

"We still don't know what kind of direction she wants to lead us in," said House Majority Leader Vince Snowbarger, R-Olathe.

REFUGEES

Haitians anticipating Clinton administration

ASSOCIATED PRESS

MIAMI — The U.S. military is prepared to disperse up to 100,000 Haitian refugees across the United States to ease the burden on Florida if there's a massive exodus from Haiti, Gov. Lawton Chiles said Tuesday.

But a Haitian community leader in Florida said that if U.S. officials were to succeed in returning ousted Haitian President Jean-Bertrand Aristide to office, "the problem won't be there."

President-elect Clinton's campaign criticism of President Bush's policy of forcibly returning Haitian refugees without asylum hearings has raised hopes in Haiti of more lenient treatment under Clinton. Hundreds of wooden boats are being built along Haiti's coast, prompting Florida officials to fear an influx of boat people after Inauguration Day.

The governor met with Assistant Defense Secretary David Berteau and other Pentagon officials in Washington Monday to discuss U.S. plans to handle any immigration emergency affecting Florida.

"They did not talk specific details, but they did tell us they had worked on their plan. They felt they could handle an emergency," Chiles said in an interview Tuesday.

Chiles said Pentagon officials indicated they could handle up to 100,000 refugees.

"And we were talking about people being processed outside of Florida, in other states, at federal facilities," he said.

U.S. Rep. E. Clay Shaw, R-Fla., said he doubted the military could control the situation.

"Not even the U.S. Navy can stop all these boats, and it's absolute foolishness to think these Haitians are going to patiently wait on the beach for a military bus to come pick them up so they can be shipped to an Army base somewhere," he said.

South Florida is still recovering from the $20 billion of destruction wrought by Hurricane Andrew. So, federal help would be essential.

Florida, financially drained by the 1980 arrival of 125,000 Cubans during the Mariel boatlift, has since established its own plan to deal with refugees, including processing and detention sites.

"It's a plan we hope we'll never have to activate," said Joe Pena, director of the governor's South Florida office. "This plan will kick in if we get the indication that the Immigration and Naturalization Service is just completely overwhelmed."

Clinton has said he opposes mass migration and has been searching for ways to avoid that possibility without violating his campaign pledge not to summarily return all Haitians. His aides have said his foreign policy team is working with the Bush administration and with Aristide on a policy statement that they expect to release late this week.

About 40,000 Haitians have fled their Caribbean nation since the bloody army coup in September 1991 that ousted Aristide, Haiti's first freely elected leader. Bush claims they are escaping poverty, not repression. Refugees claim they are fleeing army terror.

"If the (U.S.) government wants to do what is right — and legal — they should send Aristide back. If Aristide goes back, the problem won't be there," said Rolande Dorancy, head of the Haitian Refugee Center.

Haitian advocates have protested the detention of Haitian refugees, citing the treatment of Cuban refugees, who usually are freed shortly after their arrival.

Iraqis' defiance is third strike

UN, US officials say no permission granted for raids

ASSOCIATED PRESS

KUWAIT CITY — Iraq pulled the tiger's tail Tuesday and crossed over into Kuwait for the third day, running to remove equipment from a former Iraqi naval base despite warnings from the United Nations and Washington.

"They are demolishing buildings and taking whatever they can — windows, cables, everything," said Abdel Latif Kabbaj, spokesman for U.N. observers in the demilitarized zone along the Iraq-Kuwait border.

U.S. officials also said Baghdad was moving anti-aircraft missile batteries around the southern and northern "no-fly" zones in defiance of demands to remove them.

President Bush's press secretary, Marlin Fitzwater, said Iraq would get no further warnings to halt such actions before possible military retaliation. He called the situation "a matter of extreme concern."

Kabbaj said about 150 unarmed Iraqis in civilian clothes entered the zone Tuesday to remove more equipment from the former base near Umm Qasr, about 50 miles north of Kuwait City.

He said they again failed to get prior approval from the United Nations as required.

Tuesday's foray came a day after the U.N. security council condemned earlier raids and asked Iraq to return Silkworm anti-ship missiles it seized Sunday.

Hungarian Ambassador Andre Erdos said he could imagine the United States and its Persian Gulf War allies launching a military strike against Iraq "without necessarily asking for a green light from the council."

Fitzwater accused Iraq of "a clear pattern of violation" of U.N. resolutions and said it cannot continue.

Kuwaiti Defense Minister Sheik Ali al-Sabah told Parliament that the emirate was prepared to repel any Iraqi military threat.

Kuwait is trying to rebuild its 21,000-member army, shattered by the Iraqi invasion of August 1990.

After the allies defeated Iraq in February 1991, Kuwait signed 10-year military agreements with the United States, France and Britain.

Serb leader accepts peace proposal; critics question commitment to mediators' terms

ASSOCIATED PRESS

GENEVA — The leader of Bosnian Serbs said Tuesday he accepted mediators' peace proposals, apparently dropping demands for a separate state within the war-ravaged nation.

But a leader of the self-styled Bosnian Serb Republic predicted lawmakers would not back the deal by Radovan Karadzic.

The disagreement illustrates the fragile state of efforts by mediators Cyrus Vance and Lord Owen to end the ethnic fighting in Bosnia-Herzegovina, where Serbs led by Karadzic control about 70 percent of the territory.

Combat continues sporadically in Sarajevo and along a strategic Serb-held land corridor in northern Bosnia, which government forces have cut several times in the past two months. The narrow strip connects Serb-held land in western Bosnia with Serbia.

Serbia has been blamed for fomenting a civil war that has killed more than 17,000 people, left 1 million homeless and produced charges of "ethnic cleansing" — ridding areas of other ethnic groups as a Serbian way to control the territory.

At Tuesday's peace talks, Karadzic agreed to a constitutional framework proposed by the mediators, who have proposed dividing Bosnia into 10 provinces among the three main factions: Muslims, Serbs and Croats. Karadzic said the deal was subject to approval by the Bosnian Serbs' assembly within a week, a Yugoslav delegation statement said.

But Karadzic has previously agreed to local cease-fires that have been quickly violated by Serb forces. His critics have questioned his commitment to peace under anything less than his terms.

Biljana Plavsic, vice-president of the self-styled Bosnian Serb Republic, was asked by a British television interviewer if parliament will accept the deal. "No," she said. "Absolutely no."

Oil spill worsens as ship breaks up

Officials say waves, wind will help clean-up effort

ASSOCIATED PRESS

SUMBURGH, Shetland Islands — The fury of wind and waves that shattered the tanker Braer now is the best hope for cleaning up one of the world's largest oil spills, conservationists and pollution experts said Tuesday.

In darkness, the 790-foot vessel broke into at least three pieces after being grounded against the rugged edge of the Bay of Quendale for a week. Waves have risen to 30 feet and winds have hit 100 mph.

The tanker was carrying 24.6 million gallons of Norwegian light crude to Canada when it went aground in a hurricane-force storm Jan. 5. The cargo was more than twice the amount spilled by the Exxon Valdez in Alaska in 1989.

"It is obvious most of the oil has now gone. There is a possibility there will be some still on board, but we are no longer talking about thousands of tons — just hundreds," Geert Koffeman of the Dutch salvage firm Smit Tak told reporters.

This was the world's 12th largest oil tanker spill, according to Golob's Oil Pollution Bulletin of Cambridge, Mass. The worst was 79 million gallons lost by the Castillo de Bellver off South Africa in 1983.

Asked to assess the impact of the Shetland spill, David Bedborough, of the government's marine pollution control unit, said, "On crude tonnage terms, quite high. In terms of immediate, gross, fouling dirty effects, very low. In terms of more subtle effects, unknown."

Local council member Magnus Flaws said the spill was "nowhere near as bad as when I saw the vessel hitting the rocks."

"I thought the end of the world was nigh," Flaws said. "But when I look at it today, I still feel bad about it, and sad about it, but not half as sad as I thought I was going to be."

DB92 makes studio renovations, increases disabled accessibility

DARREN WHITLEY/Collegian

Jim Johnson, senior in journalism and mass communications, installs a circuit board in a new soundboard Monday afternoon as part of remodeling in the KSDB-FM 91.9 studio. Additional renovations will make the studio more handicapped accessible.

CRIS ARY
Collegian

The studio at KSDB-FM 91.9 is getting a facelift. The student radio station at K-State has renovated its studio to fit changes in equipment.

Joe Montgomery, DB92 station manager, has wanted these changes for some time. Montgomery said the changes were much needed.

"We've been wanting a new board for some time, and we got one last October," he said.

The renovations have been in progress since finals week of last semester and were completed Friday.

The new board will help the disc jockeys perform their jobs better, Montgomery said.

"Ideally, we want our studios to be as user-friendly as possible. With new or rookie DJs, you want to make things as simple as possible. The new board will help reduce some of the DJs' mistakes," he said.

Doug Chapman, assistant music director, said he agrees with Montgomery.

"It should improve the quality somewhat because there will be less mistakes by the DJs," Chapman said.

The new mixing board provides many features for the DJs at DB92.

Gary Pettet, station engineer, said the new board will have features to help tell DJs when something is wrong.

"It helps keep track of our quality control," he said.

Other features of the new board include timers, remote music starts and a talkback feature to help with station remotes and promotions.

Another reason for the renovations was to make the studio more handicapped-accessible.

Montgomery said the old studio had little room in which to maneuver and was impossible to enter with a wheelchair.

"We made sure that everything in the studio was wheelchair-accessible. We lowered much of the equipment, so anyone can reach it," he said.

Jim Johnson, former music director for DB92, who completed all renovations himself, helped with determining handicapped-accessibility.

"We had Jim Johnson sit down in a wheelchair and made sure he could reach everything."

Although renovations started during finals week, it took months of planning before work could begin.

Pettet said he had to draw out plans for the renovations, including the locations of every piece of equipment.

Many of the DJs said they like the new renovations. Chris Kollar, senior in architecture and a DB92 DJ, said he likes the new studio features.

"It's a wonderful idea. It's got some nice qualities to it," he said. "It will help with remotes and promotions."

The costs of these renovations came out of the station's general operations fund.

"It only cost a couple hundred dollars for the lumber and carpet, then add in the labor. We had already saved up for the board," Montgomery said.

The station also just received more money from Student Senate.

Montgomery said with this money, he is thinking of even more changes for the station.

Some of these changes include digital broadcasting. This would bring CD-quality sound to everything in the station, from the music to the DJs.

Montgomery said he was thinking about getting a digital audio computer to help with the production staff.

"We were the first FM station in Manhattan. I hope we can be the first digital station as well," he said.

REVIEW

PJ Harvey spews forth haunting grunge

ERIN PERRY
Collegian

PJ Harvey isn't dry — she's draining. But in a good way.

On her Indigo/Island records debut, "Dry," this angry young Brit raggedly churns out the romantic frustrations of the women of Generation X with her versatile voice and guitar.

There are no shiny, happy songs on the album, but, strangely, it's not a downer. It's a release.

Harvey — the "P" is for Polly — puts her guitar to work as a catharsis for her conflicting emotions. She can grind away her angst one minute and deliver sweet, gentle strumming the next.

Two singles off the compact disc are now in regular college-radio rotation.

"Dress," an ode to the experience of going out in that uniquely feminine garment, is one of the album's most danceable and radio-friendly selections. Powered by a stop-start beat in the verses, it bursts wide open in the chorus with boisterous Harvey chords.

But it's a far cry from the angry passion of most of the tracks. "Sheela-Na-Gig," the second single from the album, details her spurned advances on a man who only replies, "you exhibitionist."

Broadway lyrics never had it so good as when Harvey bitterly declares "I'm gonna wash that man right outta my hair/I'm gonna take my hips to a man who cares."

Harvey wrote all 11 tracks on the album, except for two written with drummer Robert Ellis — "Joe" and "Plants and Rags," a haunting sample of grunge played on string instruments. Harvey supplies the violin part herself.

She even draws material from dysfunctional relationships throughout history. "Hair" is a revisionist take on the story of biblical lovebirds Samson and Delilah with a swerving bass line.

But it's the fifth track, "Happy and Bleeding," that delivers the essence of PJ Harvey. She starts off with a simple, spare riff that soon erupts into pounding drums and raw vocals, then falls quietly back to the beginning.

Harvey is one of the few vocalists around today who knows how to spew her frustrations without sacrificing quality sound or her voice. She's not working at roughing up the edges — she just lets loose what she feels.

Next time your significant other pushes you over the edge, throw on "Dry," and let PJ do the screaming for you. It'll make you feel better.

Book buyback won't always pay for lunch

MEGAN MULLIKIN
Collegian

The color of money — a great incentive for students to sell back their books at the end of a semester, sometimes no matter how much is offered.

"I'm just ready to get rid of my books at the end of a semester. It really doesn't matter how much they offer me, I usually just take it," Angie Malloy, senior in elementary education, said.

The value of a book is decided in a couple of ways, Kay Farley, K-State Union Bookstore manager, said.

"It starts with whether a book has been ordered by a professor to be used the following semester. If it is being used, and we need the book, we pay 50 percent cash and 60 percent on the Wildcat card," Farley said.

"For example, if a person bought a book for $40 new, they would get $20 back. If that same book was sold as a used book for $30, the person would still get back $20," she said.

Books not being used the following semester are shipped to a wholesaler, Dan Walter, Varney's Book Store textbook manager, said.

"If we're not using the book again, we buy as an agent for a nationwide wholesaler," Walter said. "We've tried to store the books that are to be used in the next year, but it is too risky. Too many instructors change their minds, or a new addition comes out."

Both Varney's and the Union Bookstore can give back wholesale price only if they have reached their limit in inventory. Farley said the Union usually offers 25 percent for books sold to the wholesalers.

Malloy said she hasn't had much luck getting a lot of money back for her books.

"I've been selling back books for several semesters now, and I don't think I've ever gotten back 50 percent for my books," she said.

Farley said the Union gives more money back for books, especially if students take the money on their Wildcat cards.

Walter said the difference in the amount from the Union and Varney's depends on the situation and the textbook.

"It really just depends on the individual book. We do things to give back the most possible, but theoretically we offer the same amount," he said.

Sometimes it depends on the day of the week you sell your book back, Walter said. For example, if students sell their books back on Monday, the instructor may not have reported the book yet, and the students may receive wholesale price. Also, if students sell their books back at the end of the week, sometimes the bookstores may have their limit on that book and only be offering wholesale price.

Both Farley and Walter said they have never seen a student-operated book exchange work.

"There are several reasons it hasn't worked. First, there is no return policy. Students have to be willing to take the risk of keeping their books through book buy-back week until the next term. Then at that point there may be new editions or course changes, Walter said.

"It is a good concept, but it leaves a potential for people to rip off each other. It is pretty easy for a senior to take advantage of a freshman," he said.

Walter said he thinks the Union gets more pressure from the faculty to have a large inventory of books .

"I think people view the Union as a service to the students instead of a business," he said.

Reagan campaign innocent of delay

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — A $1.3 million congressional investigation has found no credible evidence that Republicans conspired with Iran in 1980 to delay the release of American hostages until after the U.S. presidential election.

The full report, to be released by the bipartisan congressional task force today, seeks to lay to rest allegations that have haunted the Reagan and Bush administrations.

"There is wholly insufficient credible evidence of any communications by, or on behalf of, the 1980 Reagan presidential campaign with any persons representing or connected with the Iranian government, or with those holding Americans as hostages during the 1979-1981 period," the summary said.

"There is no credible evidence supporting any attempt or proposal to attempt, by the Reagan presidential campaign ... to delay the release of the American hostages in Iran," the task force concluded after an 11-month investigation.

The report itself, which runs several hundred pages, contains detailed information rebutting allegations that senior Reagan aides — among them the late William Casey who served as his campaign manager and then headed the CIA — took part in meetings in Europe with Iranian representatives.

Farmers plant less wheat for second year

ASSOCIATED PRESS

TOPEKA — Farmers throughout the country seeded fewer winter wheat acres than anticipated for the second consecutive year, and a grain marketing analyst said that could mean a rally in wheat prices.

The Kansas Agricultural Statistics service reported Tuesday Kansas farmers seeded 11.8 million acres of wheat, down 2 percent from last year. The south-central Kansas district was the only one to increase seedings — 2.9 million acres compared with 2.6 million in 1991.

U.S. plantings were reported at 51.5 million acres, an increase of 1 percent.

Even though it increased, Bill Tierney of Kansas State University says the nationwide wheat seedings figure was lower than the grain industry expected.

"The combination of a low plantings figure and stronger than expected wheat exports could push the wheat market to new highs over the next few weeks," he said. "However, the abundant moisture situation and the relatively good condition of the winter wheat crop is likely to limit the rally."

Tuesday's reports also included a final summary for fall-harvested Kansas crops, most of which set yield records. The row crops generally benefited from good moisture conditions, although in some areas too much precipitation hampered harvests.

Grain sorghum production was up 38 percent at 244 million bushels. That placed Kansas second behind Texas in milo production in 1992. The yield of 80 bushels an acre was a new record, surpassing the mark of 75 bushels set in 1986. It was a 24 bushel increase from 1991.

Milo production might have been even greater, but harvested acreage at 3.05 million acres was 50,000 acres less than forecast in November.

The corn harvest was 259.5 million bushels, up 26 percent from a year ago and the largest crop since 1889. Yields averaged 150 bushels per acre, an increase of 25 bushels from 1991 and another new record. The previous record was 136 bushels in 1986.

Soybean production was 68.5 million bushels, a 57 percent increase and a new record.

YOU'RE ASKING ME?

by Cassandra Duveaux

Reader resents admirer's 'naked' display of affection

DEAR CASSANDRA,

You're my last hope! I've tried everything possible, but I can't seem to shake the one thing in my life I truly dread ... my virginity. Throughout high school my friends assumed I'd "done it" because I was an athlete, but now they know the truth. They all pick up, but it seems I don't know how to act around girls. I'm in desperate need of advice. Among other things, I'm starting to get nicknames such as "Joe, boo hoo, he cannot screw." Please help quick!

Joe Boo Hoo

TO HOO IT MAY CONCERN,

I understand your eagerness to part with your virginity. The desire to have sex is natural and powerful. As Australian singer/heartthrob and working-class dog Rick Springfield put it so eloquently a few short years ago, "We all need the human touch/yes, we all need the human touch ... ."

Hoo, I would suggest that you consider (using your brain, not your other favorite organ) why you want to lose your virginity. The decision to begin sexual relations is very important and traditionally irreversible. I don't need to remind you about the danger of AIDS and other sexually transmitted diseases.

Judging from the tone of your letter, you feel you are not one of the guys (or gals) because you have not yet experienced sex. The cruel (albeit mildly amusing) comments of your friends probably aren't helping your self-esteem. Ignore them.

Joe, sexual experiences are not baseball cards — you don't go get them and then trade them with friends. If you treat members of the opposite sex as merely something to "pick up" and then "do it" with, I guarantee your sex life will not be as rewarding and fulfilling as it could be.

If you are concerned about what others think about your sex life, as your letter suggests, I urge you to get the views of people who are in a loving, healthy relationship. They'll likely tell you that the best sex is the kind that comes after you take time to develop and nurture a relationship with someone you love. Unfortunately, these folks aren't the ones who usually go around dispensing unsolicited recommendations and advice about sex.

Look on your virginity as a blessing. You have an opportunity many others throw away — to begin your sex life on a positive note.

DEAR CASSANDRA,

Please help me Cassandra! There is a girl in my dorm who has been following me around for two months, and I can't get rid of her. She is madly in love with me, and I feel no attraction whatsoever toward her.

She always calls me and leaves notes on my door. I have tried talking to her, but she just doesn't listen. One night she actually came into my room and took all her clothes off while jumping all over me. I was very astonished and upset with her. I yelled and screamed for her to quit, but she just ignored me. I don't know what to do about her. I am seriously considering moving out of the dorm. That may be the only thing that will get rid of her. If you have any suggestions please tell me.

Help!

DEAR HELP,

First of all, moving to another dorm won't solve this one. A woman who is so taken with you that she breaks into your room to jump naked on your bed won't easily be discouraged. Perhaps you should introduce her to Joe Boo Hoo (just kidding).

I would urge you to calmly talk to her again. Be firm and assertive, and tell her that you simply are not interested in pursuing a relationship with her. Show her this letter and make it clear that you do not appreciate and will no longer tolerate her intrusions. Don't pretend to be flattered. If her unwelcome advances persist, talk to your dorm director. Sexual harassment is a crime.

In the meantime, do something with your friends to take your mind off your problems — make a big batch of popcorn and rent "Fatal Attraction."

TIPS FOR WRITING A CLASSIFIED AD

Always put what item or service you are advertising first. This helps potential buyers find what they are looking for.

Don't use abbreviations. Many buyers are confused by abbreviations.

Consider including the price. This tells buyers if they are looking at something in their price range.

CATEGORIES

To help you find what you are looking for, the classified ads have been arranged by category and sub-category. All categories are marked by one of the large images, and sub-categories are preceded by a number designation.

WE DO NOT USE PHONE NUMBERS OR LAST NAMES IN PERSONALS.

Service to highlight positive aspects of lives said. "I know she will be missed by a lot of people."

A memorial service will be at 2 p.m. Sunday in the All Faiths Chapel. Anne Butler, interim director of the Women's Studies Progam, said she wanted the memorial to focus on the positive aspects of the women's lives.

"When the family had a service in Atlanta, they called it a homegoing. We're attempting a service as a celebration of their lives. This will be an opportunity for students to offer their personal experiences," Butler said.

The memorial will include brief statements from friends, a performance from the United Black Voices choir, a short message from the Rev. Anthony Williams, who is a personal friend of the family, and the reading of a letter from the women's parents. Two interpretive dances will also be performed.

Butler said individuals may offer brief statements of personal experiences at the end of the formal service.

A book of personal memories of the two students is also being compiled for the family. Butler said she is asks any students with pictures or written remembrances to bring them to the memorial service.

Oleen to serve on educational committee

Oleen said.

She has asked Republicans to research faculty salaries at Kansas Board of Regents universities. She said she had received good information from K-State.

"I have asked the caucus to do research into faculty salaries at regents institutions, because we are not competing with Missouri. We're chasing them everywhere."

In addition to the education committee, Oleen will also chair the Senate Federal and State Affairs Committee. This committee reviews legislative proposals involving alcoholic beverage control, parimutuel wagering, state lottery operations, corrections issues and other state-federal issues.

"It has traditionally been a major committee in the Senate. There has been a marked improvement in my seniority this past election," Oleen said.

This committee explores controversial issues, Oleen said. Casino gambling and Indian gaming will be hot issues.

"Casino gambling may come to that committee. Casino gambling and Indian gaming," she said. "The federal legislation is pretty clear, that if Indians want casinos on their reservation, they should be able to do it. The question is, should the Indians be able to go anywhere in the state? And then, if the Indians can have it, why can't others?

"I just hope the emotional issues don't eat up the time," she said.

Oleen will be one of three senators serving on the House and Senate Joint Legislative Post-Audit Committee, which oversees the state's fiscal oversights. The members met Tuesday and will choose a chairman from among themselves.

Much what legislators will discuss this session will depend on what Gov. Joan Finney proposes in her budget and what she discussed in the State of the State address Tuesday, Oleen said.

"So much reflects the priorities set in the budget," she said. "This year she only has one budget, which is good. Last year she had two, one if we had money and one for what we really had. It sent a mixed message. Nobody knew which budget she was talking about."

Oleen said one thing Finney has proposed is a state employee pay plan.

Allied bombs hit the mark in Iraqi air raid

ASSOCIATED PRESS

Stephanie Fuqua contributed to this report.

WASHINGTON — American and allied warplanes raided southern Iraq and bombed anti-aircraft missile sites Wednesday in a fiery showdown with Saddam Hussein two years after the Persian Gulf War and a mere week before President Bush leaves office.

The 30-minute, nighttime strike by warplanes from the United States, France and Britain was accompanied by an order from Bush dispatching about 1,300 American troops to Kuwait to stand as a tripwire against any incursion from neighboring Iraq. The bombing fleet included 80 strike planes and 30 support aircraft.

"Preliminary information indicates the mission was accomplished," presidential spokesman Marlin Fitzwater said at the White House. "All of our planes have returned to their bases."

The United States had accused Iraq of a lengthy series of provocations, including deployment of missile batteries in a "no-fly zone," the firing of a missile from an Iraqi plane at an American aircraft and illegal border crossings into Kuwait.

Iraq condemned the attack as "very uncivilized" but offered to halt cross-border raids into Kuwait. Saddam, appearing on Iraqi television in military uniform, said, "The criminals have

Saddam calls for 'holy war' against allies

NICOSIA, Cyprus — Iraqi President Saddam Hussein urged his people early Thursday to wage"holy war" against Western allies after attacks on military targets in southern Iraq.

After the speech, Baghdad radio reported the raids killed a soldier and three civilians in a residential area near a"petrochemical complex" in the area around the southern city of Basra. The report, which quoted an anonymous official source, also said three soldiers and four civilians were wounded.

"Fight against them as you fought the enemies of God before, and extinguish the fire of hatred in the muzzles of their weapons," the Iraqi leader said in a speech.

"The criminals came back, carrying their spite and their tools of evil," Saddam said in the nearly 10-minute address.

He urged the Iraqi military and its air defenses to turn the skies of Iraq into a lava against the oppressors from north to south, east and west.

Research stops poachers cold turkey

BRIAN KRATZER/Collegian

Mike Finnegan, professor of social anthropology and a forensic anthropologist, holds two turkey breast bones donated to him after he made a national request for turkeys during the holidays. The bone on the left is from a wild turkey, and the other is domestic. These differences help wildlife officials prosecute poachers.

DIANE HUTCHISON
Collegian

Mike Finnegan, professor in anthropology, had one wish when he pulled the wishbone from his Thanksgiving turkey. He wanted lots of turkeys.

Finnegan had spread the word that he needed the bones of turkeys for research he is doing to help wildlife and game officials prosecute turkey poachers and thieves.

The story got national attention, but the wish didn't come true.

"I guess people were looking for a little color for a Thanksgiving story," Finnegan said. "I was interviewed by several national papers, including USA Today.

"Our intent was to advertise in Inview, the school newsletter," he said. "So I wrote a little blurb on how we had done some research on turkeys back in '85 and '86."

The story was first sent out on news releases and the wire services. After the radio stations covered the story, it gained more attention.

"First, of course, I think they were just looking for a nice Thanksgiving story," Finnegan said. "Second, I think it was the first thing they had in a long time that didn't have anything to do with Clinton.

STEPHANIE FUQUA
Collegian

Kent Glasscock will be a busy man this spring.

Glasscock, R-Manhattan, has been appointed to the Appropriations Committee and the Joint House and Senate Committee on Pensions, Investments and Benefits.

He is also vice-chairman of the House Tax Committee.

"It's always a very busy committee," he said, laughing.

It promises to be especially busy this session, as the committee has to execute legislation for the recently passed classifications amendment and will have to tangle with the property tax appraisal system.

"The first thing we have to deal with legislatively enacts the intent of the Legislature, with regards to the classification amendment," Glasscock said.

The classification amendment to the Kansas Constitution was passed during November's general election.

"The legislation itself that passed did not have a self-enacting clause to it," Glasscock said. "There has to be a bill passed that triggers the drop. We also have to clarify which fraternals are eligible for the drop."

Another important item will be property tax appraisals, he said. Currently, property appraisals are conducted by individual counties, with little or no continuity from county to county.

As a result, identical buildings in Riley and Geary counties could be paying drastically

THE ISSUES THIS SESSION

▶ Workers compensation

In each of the past two years, there has been 20 percent increases in workers compensation premiums for Kansas businesses. Proposals will be directed toward reducing fraud, limiting payments to doctors and lawyers, encouraging workplace safety and clarifying the definition of on-the-job injuries.

▶ School finance

Last year legislators decided schools would be financed by a statewide mill levy of property taxes, with some money also coming from slaes and income taxes. Every school district has the same levy, which was an attempt to equalize property taxes. The new plan also allows school districts to raise property taxes to increase their budgets by a maximum of 10 percent. Voters can attempt to block a tax increase by filing protest petitions that would force a voter referendum.

This session, legislators whose districts property taxes increased, want schools to be able to raise their budgets by three percent a year without allowing protest petitions.

The donation from William M. and Carolie Hougland will go toward the school athletic department, School of Business, Alumni Association and Helen Foresman Spencer Museum of Art following the couple's deaths.

Schrum preparing to serve as regent

WADE SISSON
Collegian

A Riley County educator and politician is preparing for her duties as a member of the Kansas Board of Regents.

Ruth Schrum, Manhattan, replaced Charles Hostetler, Manhattan, on Jan. 1. Hostetler had served on the board since 1989.

Ruth Schrum

Also appointed to the board is Maxine Porter of Reading. She replaces Jack Sampson of Hutchinson.

Both appointments must be confirmed by the Kansas Senate. Schrum said she expects confirmation by Feb. 1.

"I really feel my education background will make it easy to understand the issues," Schrum said.

Her appointment came after talks with Gov. Joan Finney, whom she has known for 20 years, Schrum said.

"We've talked about education over long periods of time and have always felt confident discussing it," she said. "I am pleased she has such a deep interest in education, and not only for the regents schools, but also for elementary school kids and for kids in general."

Finney interviewed Schrum, who was her campaign manager during her successful bid for governor, about joining the board Dec. 17.

A native of Riley County, Schrum earned a bachelor's degree in secondary education from K-State in 1965. She received both a master's degree in secondary education and a special masters building administrator's certificate from K-State.

After teaching elementary school in Dickinson County for four years, she taught American history at Fort Riley Junior High from 1969 to 1991. For the past two years, she has been a member of the University of Kansas Medical Center Admissions Board.

Her experience extends beyond education to politics and business as well.

Schrum and her husband Neil, also a K-State graduate, have owned Schrum Rental Properties since 1970. She has worked as a real estate agent for nearly 30 years.

She also served as chairwoman of the Clinton Committee in Manhattan and is currently president of the Landlords of Manhattan, an organization that works on legislative proposals for owners of rental properties.

Hostetler said issues now facing the board include the hiring of minority faculty, the recruiting of minority students, getting sufficient faculty salary increases, the mission statements and qualified admissions.

Schrum supports open admissions.

"That's fine," Hostetler said. "Not everyone will agree."

"But she will be in a minority position on this issue. I think that the regents as a whole understand the need for qualified admissions, and I think Mrs. Schrum will be out of step on this."

If the confirmation process goes as planned, Schrum will attend her first board meeting as a regent in February. In the meantime, she is studying the issues.

"I personally want to catch up on what the regents have been doing," Schrum said. "I've been trying to get through the stacks of information.

TROUBLE IN THE GULF

Iraq responds to air strikes

"I think all Iraqis are angry."

NIZAR HAMDOON
IRAQI U.N. AMBASSADOR

Immediate halt to salvage forays into Kuwait proposed

ASSOCIATED PRESS

UNITED NATIONS — Iraq decried allied air strikes on its anti-aircraft missiles Wednesday, but immediately offered to stop its salvage forays into Kuwait and to let U.N. weapons inspectors use their own aircraft.

It had balked on these two points earlier despite U.N. and allied warnings.

Iraqi U.N. Ambassador Nizar Hamdoon said Wednesday it was "really sad that people are resorting to military action rather than trying to resolve issues peacefully, which Iraq has indicated its willingness to do."

The United States, Britain and France launched the night raid to destroy anti-aircraft missile batteries in the southern no-fly zone, after repeatedly warning Iraq the missiles threatened allied air patrols.

Hamdoon said he had no casualty count.

"I think all Iraqis are angry," he said.

He said his government has always complied with terms of the U.N. cease-fire that ended the 1991 Persian Gulf War. Iraq considers the attack to be "very uncivilized," he said.

Hamdoon met at his New York residence later with U.S., British and French representatives, who sought clarification of his offer to abide by conditions imposed by the Security Council. No word emerged on the outcome.

Venezuelan Ambassador Diego Arria said no U.N. meetings were scheduled.

"It's a strong warning, no?" he said, smiling.

The attack followed repeated Security Council warnings that Iraq stop violating cease-fire terms or face serious consequences. Baghdad said it was cooperating with the council, and in a letter delivered Tuesday offered "dialogue with the council and with all who so desire" to solve problems.

After the raid, Hamdoon offered to allow U.N. weapons inspectors to resume flying into Iraq on their own aircraft. Baghdad barred such flights last week, insisting that the inspectors use Iraqi aircraft instead.

The Security Council rejected the Iraqi position as an unacceptable

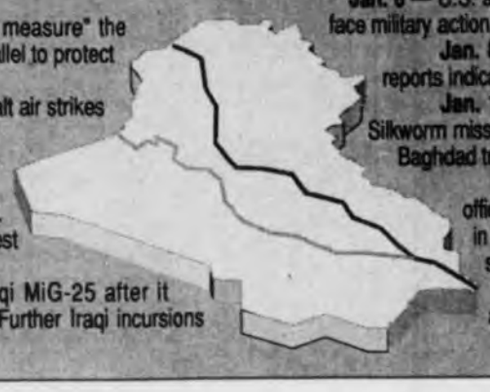
BEFORE THE STRIKE



Aug. 21, 1992 — Iraq rejects as an "aggressive measure" the Western plan to impose a "no-fly zone" below 32nd parallel to protect Shiite Muslim rebels from air attack.

Aug. 26 — President Bush gives Iraq 24 hours to halt air strikes against Shiites. Iraq warns of renewed hostilities.

Aug. 27 — No-fly zone takes effect. U.S., British and French begin air patrols.

Nov. 26 — After flying about 7,500 patrols, U.S. pilots report Saddam has "shown no inclination ... to test our resolve."

Dec. 27 — U.S. F-16 fighter shoots down Iraqi MiG-25 after it penetrates zone and ignores radio warning to leave. Further Iraqi incursions follow.

Jan. 4 — U.S. officials said Saddam, who has vowed to avenge downed plane, has moved surface-to-air missiles into southern zone.

Jan. 6 — U.S. and allies give Baghdad 48 hours to remove missiles or face military action.

Jan. 8 — Baghdad rejects allied ultimatum, but intelligence reports indicate missiles were moved.

Jan. 10 — 200 armed Iraqis cross Kuwaiti border, remove Silkworm missiles and explosives left by retreating Iraqis in 1991 war. Baghdad tries to block U.N. flights within Iraq.

Jan. 12 — Iraqis cross into Kuwait for third day. U.S. officials say Baghdad moving anti-aircraft batteries around in southern and northern no-fly zones. U.S. administration says there will be no more warnings to Baghdad.

Jan. 13 — Iraqi workmen cross again. Bush says attack will be launched against Iraq.

State lawmakers express support for allied actions

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — Kansas lawmakers expressed support Wednesday for allied air strikes against Iraq.

"Maybe now Saddam Hussein will finally get the message," Senate Republican leader Bob Dole said in a statement. "He's had more than enough warnings, but it's clear he has no intention of listening."

Dole and other Kansans agreed the bombings of missile sites in Iraq were an appropriate response to what U.S. officials consider repeated violations of the cease-fire agreement that ended the 1991 Persian Gulf War.

"Saddam ought to get the message at least that the country is unified against him," Rep. Dan Glickman, a D-Wichita, said in a telephone interview.

Rep. Jim Slattery, D-Topeka, said the United States and its allies had little choice but to use military force.

"We have to demand that Saddam Hussein comply completely with the U.N. resolutions," he said in a telephone interview. "There can't be any fish-tailing."

U.S. officials contend the Iraqis have violated the cease-fire terms by dispatching planes over a no-fly zone. The United States also has warned Saddam to dismantle missile batteries that posed a threat to allied aircraft.

Slattery said he wasn't suprised by Saddam's actions.

"We should have anticipated that Saddam Hussein would test George Bush as he leaves office, and you can expect he will test President Clinton as he assumes office," Slattery said.

Rep. Jan Meyers, R-Overland Park, said in a statement Iraq had "ignored repeated warnings" about its failure to comply with the cease-fire agreement.

Dole said the allied bombings were a needed "demonstration of strength and resolve" by the United States and its allies.

He said the military mission also could help in other spots around the world, especially in Somalia and with ethnic fighing in the former Yugoslavia.

NATION

Former residents express disgust

ASSOCIATED PRESS

DETROIT — The people of Iraq — and not Saddam Hussein — will suffer if war returns to the Persian Gulf, residents of the United States' largest community of Iraqi immigrants said Wednesday.

"I am not with America. I am not with Saddam Hussein. I am with the people of Iraq," said Yousif Zallew, a Detroit grocery store owner.

Zallew, 45, has lived in the United States for about 13 years and has family in Iraq.

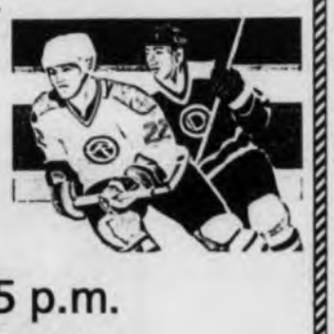
"America wants to hurt Saddam Hussein, but he will never be hurt, never. The people, the families are the ones who suffer from this," he said.

About 50,000 Iraqis live in the Detroit area, the largest such community in the United States. Most are Chaldeans, a Christian minority in Iraq.

Iraqis here expressed disgust with the latest U.S. and allied air strikes Wednesday against Iraq, a response to alleged violations of a 1991 cease-fire agreement following the Persian Gulf War.

In one Iraqi neighborhood, where store signs in Arabic outnumber those in English, many people huddled around TV sets.

"In the war, it wasn't the soldiers that got mostly killed. It was children, old people, women. Now this will happen again," said Akram Alnashhadni, 39, as he and a dozen others in an Iraqi social club watched CNN.



He and others said it was unconscionable to attack a country that hadn't attacked another.

"If I have a gun in my house, you can't come in and tell me not to have it," Alnashhadni said.

Iraqi officials have said about 100,000 tons of explosives were dropped on Iraqi cities and villages during the Gulf War in early 1991. Iraq's 17 million people were left with a shattered economy and shortages of electricity, food, water and medical supplies.

As a result, up to 5,000 Iraqi children die each month because of lack of water and sanitation, said the Detroit-based Coalition to Stop U.S. Intervention in the Middle East.

Home deserves to be saved from razing

Editor,

I am concerned about the planned destruction of the historic Edwin Ulrich home (located on the southwest corner of the intersection of Fourth and Osage streets) for the purpose of enlarging the Riley County Senior Service Center parking lot. I am also concerned about the negative effect the loss of the Ulrich home would have on the historic birthplace of playwright Damon Runyan (located on the northwest corner of Fourth and Osage), as the south-facing Runyan home is directly north of the Ulrich home.

These concerns, as well as the "sense of place" lost by the surrounding neighborhood and the Manhattan community if the Edwin Ulrich home is destroyed, merit further consideration be given to the proposed parking lot expansion plan.

I propose that the Edwin Ulrich home, garage and yard be preserved and enhanced for continued income producing residential or commercial use (as exemplified by the home utilized by Bernina Sewing Center/Tussy Mussy located on the southeast corner of Fourth Center parking lot should be expanded and landscaped to the south and west of the Ulrich home site.

The preservation of this historic and architecturally pleasing structure would do much to minimize the visual impact of the expanded parking lot, and the effect the lot area will have on the Runyan home and adjacent neighbors.

I am confident that with a little more planning the senior service center parking lot expansion will become a reality without the needless loss of some of the very important historic fabric of Manhattan.

OTHER VIEWPOINTS

Political reality probably will prevent the Clinton Administration and the new Congress from passing significant petroleum taxes.

Outrage from voters who refuse to see the long-term benefits of higher taxes on fuels probably will be enough to stop Clinton, as it has past presidents.

But the facts remain: The United States has the cheapest motor fuel and fuel oil by far in the industrialized world. It wants to discourage fossil fuel use in the interest of its environment, and it wants higher revenues to deal with monstrous deficits. Raising the costs of burning fossil fuel would help achieve all these goals.

An oil import fee would be the fairest, but no one dares that because the heavily populated Eastern seaboard wants to continue to burn cheap fuel oil. And because such a tariff would allow domestic producers higher prices for oil, demagogues will portray it as an industrial windfall.

But the tariff would help an industry that has been losing 40,000 jobs a year to foreign oil interests. And a tariff of $5 per barrel would produce nearly $15 billion a year at current rates of foreign oil consumption. ...

From the standpoint of good economic and environmental policy, higher fuel taxes clearly make good sense.

Bill Clinton has said he intends to re-make government so that it will be more efficient and effective. The federal comptroller general may have a two-word response to that worthy intention: good luck.

Recently, Comptroller General Charles A. Bowsher issued a report that said the federal government is so inept at basic financial oversight that it wastes billions of dollars each year. He cited numerous examples, including loose monitoring of Medicare claims and questionable credit policies at the Farmers Home Administration.

Clinton and like-minded policy wonks who espouse the philosophy of "reinventing government" probably will see Bowsher's report as a confirmation of their view that the resources of the federal government must be managed better. However, they're less likely to accept the logical conclusion — that the federal government simply is too big and spends too much. With an annual budget of $1.5 trillion, and a reach that extends from nuclear weapons production to youth basketball programs, the government is so massive that it's virtually impossible to manage it.

Improved bureaucratic efficiency certainly is desirable. The question is whether it's attainable without examining everything the federal government does and determining how much it really needs to be doing.

The Vegetable Plot

We need to start the new year off with some good ol' home-spun motherly advice. Not that the population at large is lacking in motherly advice — most (if not all) of us usually have an abundance all year long. It helps, however, to spread the pain around a little when this particular burden becomes too much to bear.

BRAD SEABOURN

So, I have plenty to share if any of you feel like you are running short this month or have recently been hit in the head with a baseball bat.

This month's motherly advice is "Eat your vegetables."

I must admit, I have never been much of a vegetable person. In fact, I have made it a personal, lifelong quest to eradicate as many vegetables that happen to cross my path, by any means at my disposal.

Again, in fact, as a lad I used to stuff my spinach down my milk carton while old Mrs. Hilda "The Cow" Blau, lunchroom monitor and Holy Mother of Vegetables, was twisting the ear of some poor wretch for stuffing his spinach down his milk carton. The ear-twisting was a reward for just having been made to drink the tasty "spinach" milkshake, by the way.

However, as is usually the case, motherly advice tends to return to haunt you after an adequate incubation period of say 30 years or so, or through divine revelation, whichever comes first. (Don't hold your breath for the latter.)

This particular haunting came in the form of a friend of mine, whom we will simply call Joe. The reason for his anonymity will soon be made apparent. The crucial point is that Joe is almost 10 years younger than me. So, by applying Murphy's Law for Anyone Over 30, which states: "If you feel this bad at 20, you're going to feel like dog doodoo when you're 30," I could be comfortably assured that anything Joe experienced was going to be triple for me.

On this particular occasion, Joe seemed more than a little wrung out. So, out of compassionate concern for my own health, I asked him what was bothering him.

"Aw, nothing really."

"Come on. I can tell something has been gnawing at you. You are acting like the boss really chewed your butt for something." An unfortunate choice of words as we shall soon see.

An obvious wince at this point brought the realization that "the hounds are onto something."

"No, really, it is nothing like that."

"Well, tell me then."

"I can't. It is too embarrassing."

"Joe. It's me, remember? The guy who saved you from an ignoble drowning at your wedding by pulling your drunken head out of the punch bowl? Come on, old buddy, old pal, let me have it."

"Well ... do you know what a hemorrhoidectomy is?"

"Isn't that like a tonsillectomy, only on the other end?"

"Yea, I suppose so. But then again, it ain't."

"Well, whatever it is, it can't be all that bad. Why I remember — just like it was yesterday — when I had my healthy tonsils yanked out back when yanking out healthy tonsils was the thing to do. They put me to sleep with tonsils. I woke up without tonsils and got to eat all the ice cream I could hold. It was great!"

"They don't put you to sleep for this. Only the critical part."

"What do you mean 'only the critical part?' How the heck can they anesthetize an area like that?"

"With a hypodermic needle about as long as my little finger."

"WHAT!"

"Yea. They stuck me not once, but three times. And I don't mean in the gluteus maximus. I mean "right where the sun don't shine."

"Holy Cow!"

I could feel my knees beginning to weaken, but I managed to hold on for more.

"And that was only the beginning. The 'offending protrusion,' as the Doc called it, was then whacked off with a scalpel. As God is my witness, I swear, I have never felt pain like that. Those nurses must have thought Wolfman Jack was in the building because I was howling and barking like the moon was full."

"What ... what exactly causes something like that?"

"The Doc said I wasn't getting enough fiber... you know, fruits, grains, vegetables."

By now, I had broken out in a cold sweat. Flashes of all the hundreds of spinach milkshakes I ever disposed of were beginning to pass before my eyes, one by one. And "The Cow," with her beehive hairdo, was standing there shaking her bony finger at me and twisting my ear.

Then, all the carrots, onions, green beans, cabbage, corn, broccoli, cauliflower, asparagus, green peppers, celery, peas, radishes, sprouts and lettuce I had dumped from my plate at the supper table into the small, potted cohune palm tree by the window when my mother wasn't looking, assaulted my senses in "V-8" panavision.

Mom had been right. Again.

It was too much. I left Joe standing there as I ran madly to my car and hurried home.

"What would you like for supper tonight, honey?"

"Spinach."

"Cooked with a little vinegar?"

"No, milk. Just cooked spinach and cold milk. And if it looks like I am having trouble eating it, just give my ear a twist."

The power of the people in the purple seats

It came with the first snow of 1992. That feeling. Reverse Déjà Vu, knowing I would see it again.

I watched that brown-suited man walk out across the parking lot. It was six o'clock in the a.m. Hell, we were all tired.

DAVID EUGENE FRESE

The brown-suited man? Who was he? Probably the most tired of us all. I pictured him as the tuck-the-kids-in-at-nine, bed-by-ten type. He had little business being awake at that hour.

But this man came before the students that night and asked for money. Money to build on "the K-State Tradition." Money for the greedheads in Anderson Hall and their insatiable bloodlust on the gridiron. "Win, Young Miltie," they told him, and win he did.

Alas, now he's gone. Le Milt est mort. Vive le Milt.

They told us Milt Richards was of The New Breed. They told us he would turn this sinking ship around.

That cold, cold morning as the man in the brown wool suit walked down the emptied stalls of the Union parking lot, we had little idea that as we stood behind our freezing breath, little mouths were conspiring against him, and the Big Money Boys were holding the cards.

Thus the one reason given for the End of the Milt Era, handed down from God's Chosen Administration. The Alumni were rubbed the wrong way (which leads to the question of what is the proper way to rub an alumnus? An alumna?)

The bluebloods in the purple seats, their buttcheeks pinched for Purple Pride, had spoken: Milt Must Go.

These "alumni," ones I have known, are gentle people. Unfortunately, Milt and I, we know how some of them are. How they can turn on you like a 14-year-old house dog that partly out of revenge for multiple reprimands and partly from incontinence will jump on the bed and soil the sheets you sleep in.

There are rumors that the official stories of the man in the brown suit's resignation are untrue. Maybe it was his inability to fire a bad coach. Maybe the balanced budget stories were simply fancy accounting. Maybe it was because he fell asleep while riding in a limo with whatever a "distinguished sports figure" is. Maybe it was because he preferred sweats and students to suits and swine.

Maybe it was Million Dollar Bill Snyder who said Richards must go. And, as all instructions from the head office in the Department of Football, it was carried out with the swiftness of the building of a new press box.

I sit here reminiscing of the man in the brown suit, with a $920.45 hole in my checkbook, after reading the news that I am not in control here.

It does not matter how many hours I work at small jobs to earn not a diploma but my own purple seat at the basketball games. I will not control things until I have graduated.

Then, when the athletic director of my alma mater does not show respect proper for his position, maybe I can instigate a letter-writing campaign to the president of that same alma mater. And, if that president is conscious of image, if my fellow alumni want glitz over the goods, that slouchy athletic director will "resign."

The night in front of the Union, we smoked and told stories as the man in the brown suit turned back to us and said, "Where the heck did I park my car?"

We laughed at him. His bumbling. His easy-to-make-fun-of manner. His eastern accent that made him just not fit in quite right, so would sayeth the president two months later.

"Oh, I parked it over there," he said looking to Anderson Hall. We stood there doing impressions of him as he got in his car. He drove away. He drove away.

Grade changes possible, not easy

Incompletes most common change; many students accept what they receive

STAR HILDENBRAND
Collegian

Opening a grade card is like opening a box wrapped in brown paper. One never knows whether the contents will be a surprise, or the expected.

Sometimes students are disappointed by the grades they receive because they are unaware of their semester average. At other times, grades are incorrect due to computer or human error. Grades believed to be incorrect are occasionally protested by students, Registrar Don Foster said.

Lori Schreiber, study skills instructor, learned not to take an incorrect grade quietly. When she received a B in a physics course, and thought she had almost been guaranteed an A, she tried to have it changed.

"I contacted the department office and found out that my professor had transferred to another university," Schreiber said.

"I wrote him a letter and he told me that he had thrown away the final," she said. "He couldn't even tell me the grade that I had received on the final."

Schreiber accepted the grade, but now wishes that she had taken further action to correct it.

"Now I teach my study skills class that they should not give up easily if they think their grade is incorrect," she said.

Every semester several hundred grades are changed in the registrar's office, Foster said. He said that incompletes are the source of many grade changes.

"Grades are changed for a lot of reasons," Foster said. "We do not keep statistics."

Grade mistakes could leave a student panicked.

Craig Corsini, a graduate student in geography, said he knows the feeling of grade despair.

"When I was taking Geography of Europe with Dr. Karen De Bres, I thought I would receive a B," Corsini said. "I was very startled and upset when I got my report card and it said that I had received a D."

Corsini said he called his professor, but she was out of town.

"I finally ended up calling Dr. Duane Nellis, the head of the department, to check the grade that Dr. De Bres had recorded," Corsini said. "There had been an error in transcription of the grade so that the person above me (in the roster) had accidentally become my grade."

Grade mistakes are easy to discover and can be changed at any time, providing that the professor still has kept the recorded grades, Foster said.

Alden Williams, professor of political science, said students rarely approach him about a desired grade change.

"It is pretty rare for students to come in and ask to have a grade change — about once a term," Williams said.

"I try to structure a class so that students know what grade they are getting when they are going into the final," he said. "What disturbs me is thinking there are students who do not ask questions about their grades."

Barbara Hetrick, a plant pathology professor, said she also tries to structure her class so her students know what grade they have going into the final.

"I seldom have students questioning the final grades they receive because I try to keep them informed about how they are doing throughout the semester," she said.

Jerry Weis, biology professor, said he gets a few students every semester who want to change their grade.

"I don't know if I get any more students questioning their grades than I did 20 years ago," he said. "Pre-professionals are the most grade conscious. They tend to follow their grades more closely."

He said when the students sit down to show him how they compute their grades, he often sees where they have miscalculated.

"There are more times I haven't changed a grade than I have."

When a professor agrees to change a student's grade, a grade-change form is filled out and submitted to the registrar.

breach of the cease-fire, which gives the inspectors free rein to search for weapons of mass destruction and destroy them.

Hamdoon also offered to stop Iraqi swoops to retrieve weapons and equipment from Camp Khor, a former Iraqi navy base now in Kuwait under a redrawn border.

Iraqi forces on Wednesday raided the base for a fourth straight day. They earlier carted off Silkworm anti-ship missiles and other military equipment — in violation of cease-fire rules — in addition to civilian supplies.

The air strike was believed to be punishment for those raids, as well as other Iraqi defiance of Security Council resolutions.

U.S. sources said Edward Walker Jr., the American deputy U.N. ambassador, delivered a letter to Security Council President Yoshio Hatano of Japan, reporting the U.S.-led attack.

Cats trounce Golden Eagles

MIKE WELCHHANS/Collegian

Deryl Cunningham, K-State center, goes up against Golden Eagle Ulyses Moran during the Cats' 97-68 victory against Northeastern Illinois. Cunningham finished the game with 15 points.

SCOTT ABEL
Collegian

K-State used a 55-point first half against Northeastern Illinois Wednesday to power them to their best overall start since the 1981-82 season.

K-State, now 9-2, had five players score in double figures as they disposed of the Golden Eagles 97-68 in front of 5,588 fans in Bramlage Coliseum — the second-largest home crowd this year.

The Cats' offense scored early and often against the 3-9 Northeastern Illinois squad. The frontline of Vincent Jackson, Deryl Cunningham and Aaron Collier shot a combined 21 for 32 from the field.

K-State hit 25 of their 37 field goal attempts in the first half, 18 of which came inside the paint.

"We've been posting up better and really have been playing hard," Collier said, "We're focusing on scoring points inside.

"We try to out-hustle the other teams' big men and make them run and try to get them tired."

The K-State defense allowed the Golden Eagles only nine field goals in the first half, while the Cats shot 68 percent en route to a 55-26 halftime lead.

"Defense tonight got everything going for us," forward Vincent Jackson said. "We wanted to build off this game going into the Big Eight."

The Cats led 25-17 with 12:19 left in the first half when they exploded on a 22-0 run over the next seven minutes. The K-State defense forced Northeastern Illinois into 17 turnovers in the first half and maintained a 25-point advantage throughout the rest of the game.

Golden Eagle head coach Reese Johnson, whose team finished with 25 turnovers, said K-State's defensive pressure was the key to the game.

"The game was over in the first five minutes," he said. "It might have been over in the first minute when they came out and we didn't respond."

The Wildcats have now forced 56 turnovers in their last two games.

"We really picked up the defense," said guard Askia Jones, who tied for the team lead with three steals. "We need to keep the defense and rebounding up — that's our bread and butter."

"I was pretty pleased at halftime," Coach Dana Altman said. "We out-rebounded them, shot the ball very well and got out and ran the floor.

"I thought our first-half effort was very good. Everybody contributed, and guys came off the bench and gave us something."

Johnson said that K-State's defense was the best the Golden Eagles have seen this year.

"They were better than DePaul, better than Marquette, better than Arizona State," he said.

"It was like men and boys — they came out like men, and we were boys. They showed us how we have to play if we want to be a good team."

Northeastern Illinois point guard Victor Snipes, who led all Division I schools in steals per game last season, only mustered two against the Cats, even though starting point guard Anthony Beane only played 10 minutes due to the flu.

K-State led at halftime 55-26, but shooting cooled off with a 34-percent clip in the second half. The Cats also had 10 turnovers to slow them down and committed 14 fouls in the last 20 minutes.

"In the second half, we were lackadaisical," Altman said. "We played a lot of different combinations, which may have led to our lack of concentration when we weren't quite as sharp, and people were in the wrong spots.

"Anthony was sick, and didn't play very much, which may be another reason we didn't push it like we probably should have."

The Cats next game will be Saturday afternoon against Big Eight opponent Colorado.

Basketball team needs better fans

Is it Bramlage Coliseum or "The Mausoleum"?

Let me rattle off some numbers — 5,412; 5,398; 5,013. No, those aren't the answers to those three problems discussed in your calculus recitation. Those are attendance figures from the first three home games here at K-State.

Yet Coach Dana Altman and his troops haven't been heard complaining about the lack of hometown fan support. Instead, they've gone out and done their job — win ballgames.

Six wins at home, including last night's win over Northeastern Illinois, is good. But even better is the fact that this edition of the basketball Wildcats won big games at the University of Cal-Santa Barbara — where only UNLV, Arizona State, and Utah State won last year — and at Oklahoma State.

Now it's your turn to show a little effort on behalf of Wildcat basketball. We all know the K-State/KU matchup is Monday night on national television — two good reasons for a sellout.

But what about Saturday's game against Colorado? It's a conference game in what looks to be a pretty evenly matched race. It's against a team that took K-State to the wire at home a year ago.

But most importantly, it's at Bramlage, a place at which a Wildcat team should never lose. Then again, it's also a place that a Wildcat team should expect a lot of fan support, not the silence that has prevailed there this season.

TROY COVERDALE

As K-State fans, we always hear about the days of Ahearn and how loud the "Old Barn" could get. Bramlage has had its days as well.

How about when K-State upset the No. 1 Missouri Tigers two years ago on television? That's the loudest I have heard a K-State crowd get. It's time for that kind of support again for this group of Wildcat hoopsters.

Monday, let's pull out all the stops for our favorite "friends" from down the river.

Remind Rex Walters and Richard Scott of how much we loved their "Victory Salute" of a year ago. Remind Rex that he couldn't cut it against Big Ten competition when he was at Northwestern, and that he still can't (witness Indiana and Michigan's games against K-Who).

And, of course, let him know that real basketball players don't cry and whine.

Remind Roy "Mr. Clean" Williams that two of his former recruits (Rick Calloway and Sean Tunstall) have been busted for drugs in the last two months. Remind Roy that we loved his comments after the game here last year — basically that K-State fans are classless. Of course, he said this after his players were pelted with ice during the "Victory Salute." And Roy's reaction to the "Salute" — he didn't see it.

Finally, on Monday, let's force the noise level in Bramlage so high that they don't need those two microphones hanging over the student section.

This group of Wildcats deserves it.

Collier sets Bramlage Coliseum record

▶ Aaron Collier, Wildcat forward, scores two of his 18 points against the Golden Eagles Wednesday night.

MIKE WELCHHANS
Collegian

BRIAN ANDERSON
Collegian

For a while, it seemed as if forward Aaron Collier wouldn't miss Wednesday night.

Against the Golden Eagles, Collier had his best offensive game as a Wildcat, scoring 18 points and helping K-State to a 97-68 win.

The 6-foot 6-inch senior set a Bramlage record for field goal percentage, making eight out of his 10 field goal attempts for an 80-percent clip. Add this game to the Oklahoma State win Saturday, and Collier has made 14 of his last 17 shots — good for 82.4 percent.

Collier, who made all six of his first-half attempts, said he was looking to take the best shot available.

"I've just been trying to shoot for a high percentage and take better shots," Collier said. "I think my game has become more aggressive this year."

Collier and the other two frontline starters, forward Vincent Jackson and center Deryl Cunningham, combined to score 52 points and grab 21 rebounds in the victory.

Collier made two out of his four second-half shots. His only misses were underneath the rim and near the left side of the lane.

For Collier, scoring is not what is important.

"I wouldn't say it was my best game I've played so far," Collier said. "I would rather have 10 rebounds than 12 points in a game."

Collier has improved his shooting from last year, when he shot 44.8 percent for the year. His 58.4 field-goal percentage is second only to Ron Lucas' 59 percent.

Collier has hit at least 50 percent of his shots in each of the last 10 games, including 60.6 percent during K-State's four-game road trip..

He has been a steady starter for Altman this season. After 11 games, Collier has reached the double-digit mark seven times.

Collier ranks second in rebounding with six boards a game. But he said he is behind in that area of his game.

"My knack to get to the ball hasn't been there lately."

His 4.3 rebounding average last year tied him for second on the squad with Askia Jones.

This year, Collier topped the team in rebounds with seven against Wichita State and nine against Nevada-Reno.

SPORTS DIGEST

▶ CATS SEE NFL ACTION

Four Wildcats from last year's 7-4 football team saw limited action this year in the National Football League.

Wide receiver Michael Smith played in three games for the Kansas City Chiefs, including the 17-0 playoff loss to the San Diego Chargers. In that game, Smith caught a 28-yard pass late in the fourth quarter. It was his only catch of the season.

Tight end Russ Campbell played for the Pittsburgh Steelers. He was credited with just one kickoff return for zero yards.

Rogerick Green and Elijah Alexander were signed by the Tampa Bay Buccaneers.

Alexander played in 12 games, but he was used almost exclusively on special teams. He made five special-teams tackles.

Green injured an elbow during the preseason and was on injured reserve until the team's seventh game. In that game, he was on the field for just two plays — on the first, he got beat for a touchdown. On the second, he injured a knee.

He went back on the injured reserve and stayed there until season's end.

▶ AP HONORS JORDAN

NEW YORK (AP) — The Chicago Bulls' Michael Jordan was named the Associated Press Male Athlete of the Year Wednesday.

Jordan is only the fifth man to win the award in consecutive years, joining Joe Montana, Carl Lewis, Byron Nelson and Don Budge.

Jordan won by a comfortable margin over a field that included Lewis, Mario Lemieux, Magic Johnson, Shaquille O'Neal, Dennis Eckersley, Steve Young, Christian Laettner and Barry Bonds.

ATHLETIC DEPARTMENT

K-State looking for AD with local ties

Epps and Krause will accept duties before the search begins

"In athletics, I'm now convinced, you're better off finding someone who has a tie to K-State."

JON WEFALD

STEVEN ROCK
Collegian

When the K-State administration begins its nationwide search for a new athletic director, it plans to emphasize a key element that outgoing Athletic Director Milt Richards lacked — local ties.

"It's important for an athletic director to be not only internal, but external as well," K-State president Jon Wefald said. "Not only to have good budget procedures and marketing strategies, but equally important, the external job becomes paramount."

That external aspect of the job — primarily, the public relations with the school's alumni — is the facet of the job in which outgoing AD Milt Richards failed, Wefald said.

"We have, let's say 90,000 alums, half of whom — or more — live right here in the state of Kansas.

"And they want to feel good about the athletic department."

Because Richards had no ties to the University or the state, Wefald said, that didn't happen.

"In athletics, I'm now convinced you're better off finding someone who has a tie to K-State," Wefald said.

Richards had not yet visited the campus when he was hired out of Temple University.

In the meantime, Wefald has announced that the interim athletic director duties will be shared by Associate Athletic Director Jim Epps and University vice president Bob Krause.

Epps will be responsible for coordinating the daily internal activities and will report to Krause. Krause will be responsible for coordinating the overall activities and policy decisions of the athletic department.

Wefald said the search for a permanent athletic director won't begin for at least three months.

"This will give us the time to bring the major projects to conclusion," he said. "We've done it before with Epps and Krause, and it worked out well."

Epps served as the interim AD on three previous occasions, the latest in 1991 after the resignation of Steve Miller.

Krause, who will play a role in the hiring of a new athletic director, said that ideally a new AD will be named before the fall semester.

"I feel a lot of times when we impose deadlines, we make some bad decisions," he said. "We'll give ourselves some time."

Two individuals who have been mentioned as front-runners are Ernie Barrett and Jack Hartman.

Barrett, currently the director of development in the marketing department, was the athletic director from 1969-75. He also played basketball for K-State from 1948-51 and went on to play professionally for the Boston Celtics.

But Wefald said he doesn't consider Barrett a true candidate.

"He's been the AD," Wefald said. "And I've said this to him before — if you step down as president of the United States, or as governor, or president of a university, or as AD, and then you leave for whatever the reason — you can't come back.

"It's just kind of a rule of thumb."

Hartman is the winningest basketball coach in K-State history. He led the Cats to nine NCAA tournaments and retired in 1986. He has spent the last six seasons as the analyst on K-State's local television coverage.

"I happen to like Jack a lot," Wefald said. "He commands respect. He's a no-nonsense person.

"But it's probably better not to speculate on him at this point."

COLLEGE BASKETBALL

Vanderbilt topples No. 1 Kentucky

ASSOCIATED PRESS

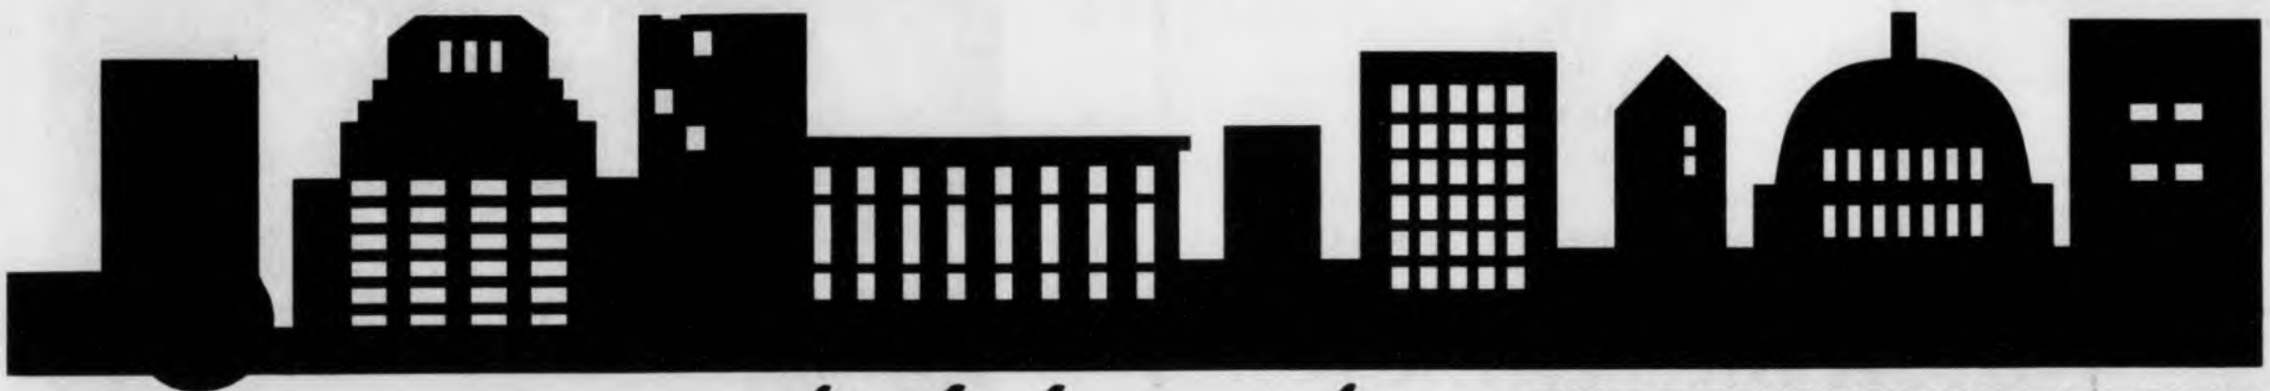
NASHVILLE — Chalk up another upset for Vanderbilt's Memorial Gym magic and another quick end to Kentucky's stay at No. 1.

Billy McCaffrey scored 22 points and handed out a school-record 14 assists as Vanderbilt downed top-ranked Kentucky 101-86 Wednesday night.

Vanderbilt, which has a .779 winning percentage at Memorial Gym, beat the last No. 1 team to visit, North Carolina in 1987-1988.

The Wildcats had taken over No. 1 in the Associated Press poll Monday after Duke's loss to Georgia Tech on Sunday, the first time Kentucky had been No. 1 since 1988. That time the Wildcats lost to Auburn in their first game with the top ranking.

The Commodores (12-3, 2-1 SEC) were nearly perfect at the free throw line, making 36 of 41. Kentucky (11-1, 2-1) found itself in foul trouble early with Jamal Mashburn, Travis Ford and Rodney Dent with four fouls each late in the game.



McCaffrey put the Commodores up 70-64 with 9:59 before the Wildcats gave their last charge at the lead.

Junior Braddy capped a 10-4 run with a 3-pointer that gave Kentucky its only lead of the second half, 75-74 with 6:44 to go. But then the Commodores took advantage of the Wildcats' foul trouble and put away the victory with an 8-3 run capped by two free throws by Kevin Anglin with 3:32 left for an 83-78 margin.

Kentucky tried to pressure the Commodores with its full-court press. The strategy worked at first as the Commodores looked hesitant and fell behind 20-12.

Vanderbilt then settled down and went ahead 26-24 on a three-point play by Chris Lawson with 7:39 left as part of a 10-2 run that gave the Commodores a 31-26 edge.

The Commodores, picking up confidence with each point, went ahead by as many as 44-39 on two free throws by Anglin before Rodrick Rhodes' jumper with 3 seconds remaining tied the score at 46-46 going into halftime.

THEATER

Speech department plans smorgasbord of productions

CRIS ARY
Collegian

A classic drama, a modern-day fairy tale and an opera head the list of productions students can see at K-State this semester.

"It's wonderful. We have seasoned and good students," Marci Maullar, assistant professor of speech, said.

The first major production of the semester will be "Prelude to a Kiss," directed by Kate Anderson, associate professor of speech. The play was written by Craig Lucas, who also wrote the screenplay for the film by the same name.

"It's a straightforward love story about the nature of true love," Anderson said.

The play will open Feb. 11. It will run through Feb. 14 and continues from Feb. 18 to Feb. 20.

"It's a fairy-tale story of adults, by adults and for adults," Maullar said.

The actors in the production are Jennifer Catney, graduate student in speech, who plays the lead female role of Rita; Scooter Nelson, junior in journalism and mass communications, as the male lead of Peter; and Walt Boyd, graduate student in theater, as an old man.

"We have a wonderful cast. People will have a really enjoyable evening. It's a touching show and a charming piece," Anderson said.

The second production will be the mid-19th century German opera "Martha."

The opera, which will run March 4-6, was written by Fredrick von Flotow and will be directed by Lewis Shelton, associate professor of speech.

"It is a precursor to Gilbert and Sullivan musicals," Shelton said.

The play is set in early England and is a lighthearted look at the struggle between lovers of different social classes.

"It's not a well-known opera," Shelton said. "But it has been in 20 different productions world-wide in the last 10 years, and that is a lot."

The cast features an alternating lead female role. Aggie Callison, junior in music theater, and Keong-Ok Song, graduate student in music, will alternate in the role of Lady Harriet, the lady-in-waiting to the queen. Rob Fann, senior in music, will play the role of Lionel, the farmer who falls in love with Lady Harriet.

Other roles include Nancy, played by Juli Borst, senior in music, and Richard Webster, junior in music, in the role of Plunkett.

"It is a strong cast. We selected this opera because it was accessible to our singers," Shelton said.

Many students will be surprised on how much they'll enjoy "Martha," he said.

"The music will take a hold of you and take you with it," he said.

The final production will be William Shakespeare's "Hamlet," directed by Charlotte MacFarland, assistant professor of speech.

The play will open April 15 and run through April 17. It will continue from April 21 to April 24.

"I've always wanted to do Hamlet. I had to cut some of it because of its length, but I tried to keep the power in it," MacFarland said.

The play is the classic story by Shakespeare but without a particular time period.

"It will look somewhat mixed in periods. We will include a modern musical score that will have some jazz and maybe even some rock sounds in it," she said.

The cast members will receive lessons from guest artist J.R. Beardsley from San Francisco. He will instruct the students in the techniques of swordfighting used in the production.

The cast includes Kevin Kelly, senior in theater, playing the lead role of Hamlet. Maria Santucci, senior in theater, will play Gertrude. Michael Brennen, freshman in theater, will play Claudius, and Erin McGinnis, junior in theater, will play the role of Ophelia.

"I have a wonderful cast. I feel lucky to have them," MacFarland said.

She said she thinks "Hamlet" is an important piece of literature that all should experience.

"No one really has a liberal arts education without seeing and reading 'Hamlet,'" she said.

For students who are interested, Maullar advises to get tickets early because later dates for productions may be sold out.

Group expands its name, its scope

WADE SISSON
Collegian

The Manhattan Alliance on Central America has changed its name to match its expanded purpose.

Now known as the Manhattan Alliance for Peace and Justice, the scope of the organization has gone beyond the problems of Central America that were prevalent when the group was formed in 1984, said Stan Cox, a member of the group's board of directors.

"Our purpose now is to not be guided by events, as we were during the Reagan and Bush years," Cox said.

Reinvestment of the U.S. military budget into the civilian economy is a primary goal for the organization, he said.

"This is a good time to reorganize, because I don't think we can look to the new administration and the new Congress," Cox said. "It will take a grassroots movement to tell the new leaders we can't continue the policies of the past 12 years."

MACA members have in recent years become involved with issues in other parts of the world, such as world hunger or the war in the Persian Gulf, MAPJ member Cia Verschelden said.

"It became increasingly clear over the last few years that the people who were concerned with Central American issues were also concerned with other places as well," Verschelden said.

New tickets save time, mistakes

Police will use money to maintain, build other lots

JENNIFER SHANK
Collegian

Parking Services has found success with the new ticketing procedure that was implemented last fall. The new procedure involves a hand-held computer system that processes tickets in seconds.

Lance Lunsway, parking control supervisor, said when the computerized ticket is issued, it is stored in memory and goes straight to the computer system in the office.

"The ticket has all of the information printed out on it, including the time, date and license number," he said. "This takes care of mistakes made by the ticketer or in the office."

Lunsway said the new system is very efficient because of the time it saves in the office.

"It used to take around 10 minutes to process a ticket, now it is done in a matter of seconds," he said.

One of the biggest advantages of the new system is that it is easier to detect excessive violators. This pertains to students who have had five or more unpaid tickets. Lunsway said the computer will print up excessive violators immediately, and wheellocks will be used. The computer can also detect stolen permits, after which a tow will be issued.

David Amaro, programmer for Parking Services, said in the first week of the computerized program, 2300 tickets were issued as opposed to around 900 now. He said more were issued in October because of the onset of cold weather.

"Students think they can't walk to campus when it first gets cold, now they are used to it," he said.

Lunsway said the money from the tickets goes to the upkeep of parking lots and the building of new ones.

"K-State is one of the lowest in the Big Eight in terms of prices of tickets," he said.

Lunsway said the new system is working well and is an investment that will save the University money in the long run.

Historic treaty signed by nations

Pact bans chemical weapons, calls for destruction of stockpiles

■ Nations signing the treaty will be required to destroy stockpiles of chemical weapons and the factories that produce them within 10 years of ratification.

ASSOCIATED PRESS

PARIS — The United States, Russia and dozens of other nations signed a historic treaty Wednesday to rid the world of chemical weapons, the first-ever prohibition of an entire class of weapons of mass destruction.

The only cloud was a decision by most Arab states not to sign, in protest over Israel's refusal to endorse the nuclear non-proliferation treaty.

But four Arab nations — Morocco, Algeria, Mauritania and Tunisia — were among the 65 states signing by the end of the opening session, and speakers appealed for holdouts to reconsider.

Others nations signing Wednesday included China, India, Pakistan and Iran. More than 120 countries are expected to sign by the ceremony's closure Friday.

Nations signing the treaty will be required to destroy stockpiles of chemical weapons and the factories that produce them within 10 years of ratification.

The pact also includes strong provisions for international inspections of suspected violations.

Speakers from Britain, Belgium and Iran referred to their nation's bitter experiences with poison gas, and Australian Foreign Minister Gareth Evans recalled his childhood in 1940s.

"I was exposed to the incessant coughing — racking, gasping, wheezing — of an invalid uncle of mine," Evans said. "Many thousands of Australians were either killed outright or, like my uncle, suffered grievously for many years not far from here in the trenches of World War I."

U.N. Secretary-General Boutros Boutros-Ghali, one of the opening speakers, called the treaty "a historic result for which the entire international community can take credit."

"This treaty bans weapons that are not only extremely dangerous, but ... can spread easily throughout the world," Boutros-Ghali said.

Secretary of State Lawrence Eagleburger urged other Arab nations to sign, saying such a move would be a step toward eliminating weapons of mass destruction from the Middle East.

"The fact of the matter is that linking this convention to other issues cannot affect the fate of those issues, but it will surely undermine the effect of this treaty in the one region most exposed to the danger of chemical weapons — namely, the Middle East," Eagleburger said.

Israeli Foreign Minister Shimon Peres called for global arms control settlements on "conventional hardware, ballistic missiles, chemical, biological and nuclear weapons."

"I call upon all of our neighbors to establish an arms control dialogue with us, and all parties to sign the chemical weapons convention and build a new Middle East free of the horrors of war," he said.

Glasscock to keep busy during legislative session different property taxes. The issue has come to the forefront because of legislation passed in 1992 that finances school with a 32 mill statewide property tax levy.

"In light of school finance, the attorney general has said appraisals are not done on an equal basis all over the state. He wants to take it away from the counties and bring it to Topeka," Glasscock said. "I personally don't like the idea."

Overall, he said, taxes will probably not be increased.

Glasscock said there will be other issues for the Legislature to tackle as well.

"Clearly, the overriding concern is the budget, how to divide up the monies that the state has, how to determine that in some fair and equitable way. It will be a tight budget year," Glasscock said.

Several issues left from last year's session remain to be addressed.

"Worker's compensation will be dealt with and be high profile," Glasscock said. "There will be some kind of stab at a state solution to the health-care problem. I don't think it will go very far. I think people will want to wait and see what the federal government will do.

Somali killed as tensions mount

ASSOCIATED PRESS

MOGADISHU, Somalia — Stung by bold Somali attacks that inflicted the first two American military casualties, U.S. forces killed one gunman Wednesday as edgy Marines patrolled lawless Mogadishu in the hunt for weapons.

A Somali sniper fired three shots at a Marine patrol wounding a U.S. Navy medic Wednesday afternoon, less than a day after a Marine was killed in a firefight near the airport.

Later, Marines searching for a weapons cache inside a building near the national theater shot to death a Somali who threatened them with a heavy machine gun.

Automatic weapons fire crackled on the streets of the capital Wednesday night.

At checkpoints, Marines appeared more nervous and imposed stricter security. Some directed anger at Somalis.

"A lot of people aren't going to like Somalis even though some are innocent," said Lance Cpl. Jesse De Guzman, 21, of San Jose, Calif. "You start looking at them differently. It just gets you mad inside, but you have to hold it in."

Marine Col. Michael W. Hagee said at a news conference that the casualties would not cause any changes in military operations. He said U.S. forces would continue to step up their patrols and hunts for weapons.

"Because we have reduced the number of weapons on the street we have put some of these militia individuals out of business. They are no longer able to extort on their security rackets," Hagee said. "It's still a dangerous place, but based on when we came ashore a little over 30 days ago it is a much safer place."

The first Marines landed Dec. 9 to start an international operation to end two years of clan fighting and banditry and get food to Somalia's famine-stricken people. Army Lt. Col. Steve Ritter said more than 33,000 soldiers from 20 nations are in Somalia, including 22,000 Americans.

Hagee said it was too early to tell if the attacks that inflicted the American casaulties represented any kind of organized resistance by the Somalis.

The Tuesday night ambush that killed Marine Pfc. Domingo Arroyo, 21, of Elizabeth, N.J., and the sniper attack that wounded the medic followed the most ambitious American effort to disarm Somalis in Mogadishu.

YOU'RE ASKING ME?

by Cassandra Duveaux

Living-group status not important in relationships

DEAR CASSANDRA,

I am writing in response to "Never Knew Lonely's" December letter. I'm pretty astonished that a non-greek actually even got the time of day from a sorority member. I was dating a sorority member at Washburn University for 18 months, during which all was well until I went to college. She constantly "suggested" that I join a fraternity. I refused politely, but vehemently. To sum it up, I lost her. It's been 13 months now, a new college and an inactive social life since.

I came to K-State in search of a "new life," but I find the same petty greek antics, even more so, that turned me off to fraternity life originally. Cassandra, I do know that there may be a few greek/non-greek relationships out there, and I wish them luck. But why can't people see the "big picture?" After college, greek membership becomes quite irrelevant. The emphasis placed upon conformity does little to foster self-initiative, and that's what's needed to succeed.

Until I graduate, I'll trudge through college with "groupthink" being the prevailing attitude. To those greeks who shun us peon non-greeks, the joke will be on you. To those who don't care about greek membership, you'll benefit from the friendships you'll cultivate.

Odd Man Out

DEAR ODD,

Wah, wah, wah. Cry me a river. This whole I-can't-get-a-date-with-a-greek/non-greek thing is a broken record.

I'm sorry your previous relationship didn't work out. It sounds like it poisoned you to all greeks. And I'm sorry your ex tried to pressure you to join a fraternity (despite your vehemently polite refusals).

But I sincerely doubt the reason for your current social inactivity is due to a quagmire of collegiate conformity or a campus-wide conspiracy of sorority members to not date you. Even greeks haven't refined networking to that level.

If someone won't go out with you based simply on your greek/non-greek status, they have done you a favor. If you are upset because you are exclusively and unsuccessfully trying to date sorority members, then you are guilty of the same "groupthink" you abhor. If folks spent less time worrying about what living group a person was in and spent more time trying to get to know someone as an individual, they'd be happier.

DEAR CASSANDRA,

I hate to bother you, but I have a small complaint. I think your column needs some better topics. Some of the subjects you choose to discuss in your column, such as sex, are really overdone. They're boring, and some of them are just plain stupid. I really don't see a point to the letters you choose to answer except a good hard laugh.

I read the Collegian every day during lunch. It never fails; I always hear at least two other people, besides myself, talking about how dumb Cassandra's column was again.

I know you must pick the letters you choose to discuss because you have a right to disregard those you feel are unnecessary. Could you please choose some different topics? I'm not saying to put something nice and innocent like grandma's favorite recipe, but just broaden the topics a little. I'm not trying to be a stick in the mud, but it does need some expansion. A lot of people aren't interested in other's perverted sexual matters.

I know that it is impossible to please every reader, but some consideration into the matter would be appreciated.

Thank you for your time.

Deeply Concerned

DEAR DEEPLY,

I'm sorry, I didn't read your entire letter. I kept waiting to get to the smutty part, but it never came.

Seriously, I agree. Sex is interesting, but there are many other topics worthy of discussion. However, the vast majority of letters I have received are about sex.

Just for you, here is a recipe that is one of my grandmother's favorites.

Pot roast with potatoes and carrots:

2-3 pound roast
4 large cut potatoes
1/2 pound baby carrots
3 bay leaves
2 cups water
1 cut onion
5 pieces bacon

Preheat oven to 375 degrees. Put all ingredients in a roasting pan. Sprinkle mixture liberally with salt, pepper, garlic and other desired spices. Wrap bacon strips around the roast. Baste roast with butter. Cover pan. Have sex for an hour or two while meat cooks pausing only to baste roast with butter every 20 minutes. Drain and serve with dinner rolls and apples.

Letters to Cassandra may be submitted in person or by mail to the Kansas State Collegian, c/o Cassandra Duveaux, Kedzie Hall 106, Manhattan, KS 66506.

Cassandra reserves the right to edit the content for the purpose of conserving space. Unless otherwise specified, all letters will be open to the public. Correspondence designated as "private" or "not for publication" will be maintained in the strictest confidence.

The advice presented in this column is solely the opinion of the columnist and does not reflect the opinion of the Collegian or K-State.

Clinton supports Bush's decision to strike come back, carrying their hatred and their evil with them."

President-elect Bill Clinton, who was telephoned by Bush as the attack was getting under way, said, "I think it was the right decision, done in the right way." He said "you can't rule out force" after he takes office if Saddam remains defiant.

The allied bombing was a limited action, confined to military targets and posing no direct threat to the safety of Saddam, hundreds of miles away in Baghdad. The United States said the strike was designed to spare civilian casualties.

Baghdad radio reported the raids killed one soldier and three civilians were killed in a residential area near a petrochemical complex. The report also said three soldiers and four civilians were wounded.

Bush said the strike demonstrated "we are serious" in demanding that Saddam comply with U.N. resolutions that set terms at the end of the Gulf War.

"You've got to do what you have to do," he said.

Bush said it did not matter that the bombing came just one week before he leaves office.

"I'm president until the 20th, and I will run the foreign policy and make these kind of decisions as long as I'm president," he said.

In London, Prime Minister John Major said the world was growing increasingly intolerant of Saddam's defiance.

"I hope this will put an end to the infringements," Major said. "We've hoped that before, and it hasn't. If he infringes again, he must expect us to retaliate again, and we have made it entirely clear to him that we will certainly do that."

Fitzwater said they are prepared to take additional forceful actions.

The military said about 1,000 soldiers from the 1st Cavalry Division would fly from Fort Hood, Texas, to Kuwait and join 300 special operations forces already taking part in a military exercise there.

A Fort Riley official said Wednesday that there were no plans to deploy any 1st Infantry Division Troops in support of the action.

"We haven't heard anything at this point," spokesman Mark Meseke said.

Meseke refused to comment on what he called "conditionals" which would include information on whether or not the base had been put on an alert status.

He said if the 1st Infantry is scheduled to deploy, the earliest Fort Riley officials could comment would be 72 hours before the actual deployment.

U.S. pilots returning to the carrier Kitty Hawk said they made double passes over their targets to make sure they hit the right ones and were crippling Saddam's ability to maneuver in the skies in southern Iraq. They said they encountered only ineffectual anti-aircraft fire.

Senior Pentagon officials said Saddam's air-defense capabilities will have been reduced "very significantly" if the missile strikes were as effective as initially believed. Still, they said he had anti-aircraft missile batteries in the northern "no fly zone" and elsewhere.

Fitzwater said the bombing was in retaliation for repeated provocations by Iraq, including the deployment of surface-to-air missile batteries in southern Iraq. The missiles were deemed a threat to allied aircraft patrolling a no-fly zone established after the war.

Fitzwater said he could not judge Saddam's motives but that it was fair to speculate he was exploring for any weakness as the United States changes administrations.

Saddam calls on Iraqis to fight

"Each aircraft of theirs in the sky of Iraq is a target for your weapons. Use the name of God, and you will find them wrecked, God willing."

He said, "The American aggressors and their allies who work under Satan ... attacked our air defenses beginning with the southern part of the Iraqi territory."

"Another battle has started. Another holy war ordained by God, so that we can attain another great victory for you, the Iraqi people," Saddam said.

He praised the Iraqi armed forces as"the pride of Iraq" and the Iraqi people as the"knights ... of the mother of all battles," Iraq's name for the Persian Gulf War.

"The aggressors will be defeated," Saddam said, using phrases reminiscent of the gulf crisis.

TV images showed Saddam in uniform, seated behind a desk with an Iraqi flag nearby emblazoned with the phrase"God is Great" as he delivered his speech from an undisclosed location.

Turkey research helps to nab poachers

"I remember I told one radio station during a live interview that I had said to send wild turkeys and not just domestic," Finnegan said laughing.

After Thanksgiving, Finnegan was asked how many turkeys had been sent to him. At the time he had only received 25 turkey carcasses.

"They had said, 'Oh, we thought you'd get so many that we just threw ours away,'" Finnegan said.

He has done a little better, though, and now has seven wild and 48 domestic turkeys.

"Once we're done with the measurements of the bones, we'll write another paper," Finnegan said.

The research has been an ongoing project Finnegan has worked on in his spare time.

"We're only worried about the wild versus domestic and the difference in ages," Finnegan said.

The research is done to help wildlife and game officials prosecute turkey poachers, and thieves who steal from turkey farms.

"The reason all this started was from a forensic study after a couple of guys had stolen some birds from a turkey farm in Missouri," Finnegan said.

Later, the men were pulled over by policemen and asked to open their trunk, he said. They had about five dressed birds and said they were wild birds they had shot themselves.

"From a wing and a drumstick we can tell what kind of a bird it is," he said. "Measurements are something easy to show to a jury."

Finnegan was often asked the same questions during some of the interviews about the research. Finnegan said one question often asked was how much this was costing the government.

"It doesn't cost hardly anything at all," Finnegan said. "I come in about an hour or two early in the morning, some of the students help clean the birds, and I have a daughter and a son who help number the bones."

He has also been asked frequently if turkey poaching was a big crime in Kansas.

"I don't think there has been a poaching case that was prosecuted in Kansas for over 10 years," Finnegan said. "It has been a problem in states like Missouri and Tennessee, but it's not a big deal here."

Finnegan said he is still hoping to get more turkeys sent in to continue the research and perfect the measurement system.

"Of course we're trying to get this good enough for people in the field to use," Finnegan said. "We can do the same thing with human bones. This is just an extension of it."

Enrollment figures reflect steady decline

ASSOCIATED PRESS

Enrollment on the first day of classes for the spring semester was about the same as last year at the University of Kansas and Kansas State University.

First-day enrollment was down by 1 percent at K-State — from 17,168 last spring to 16,950 this year — but school officials say the relatively steady enrollment was anticipated because of declining numbers of high school students in recent years.

"In terms of enrollment numbers, we are where we planned to be," said Pat Bosco, associate vice president and dean of student life.

"Fall 1992 was the final year of a three-year high school graduation decline, and that decline is reflected in each of our classes," he said. "In fall 1993, we expect to begin a steady increase in enrollment."

Officials at KU, where first-day enrollment was up by 788, played down the significance of the increase because enrollment procedures have changed.

The total first-day enrollment figure for the main campus, off-campus classes and the medical center is 26,353 — the figure was 25,565 for spring semester last year.

Official enrollment figures will not be released until the 20th day of classes.

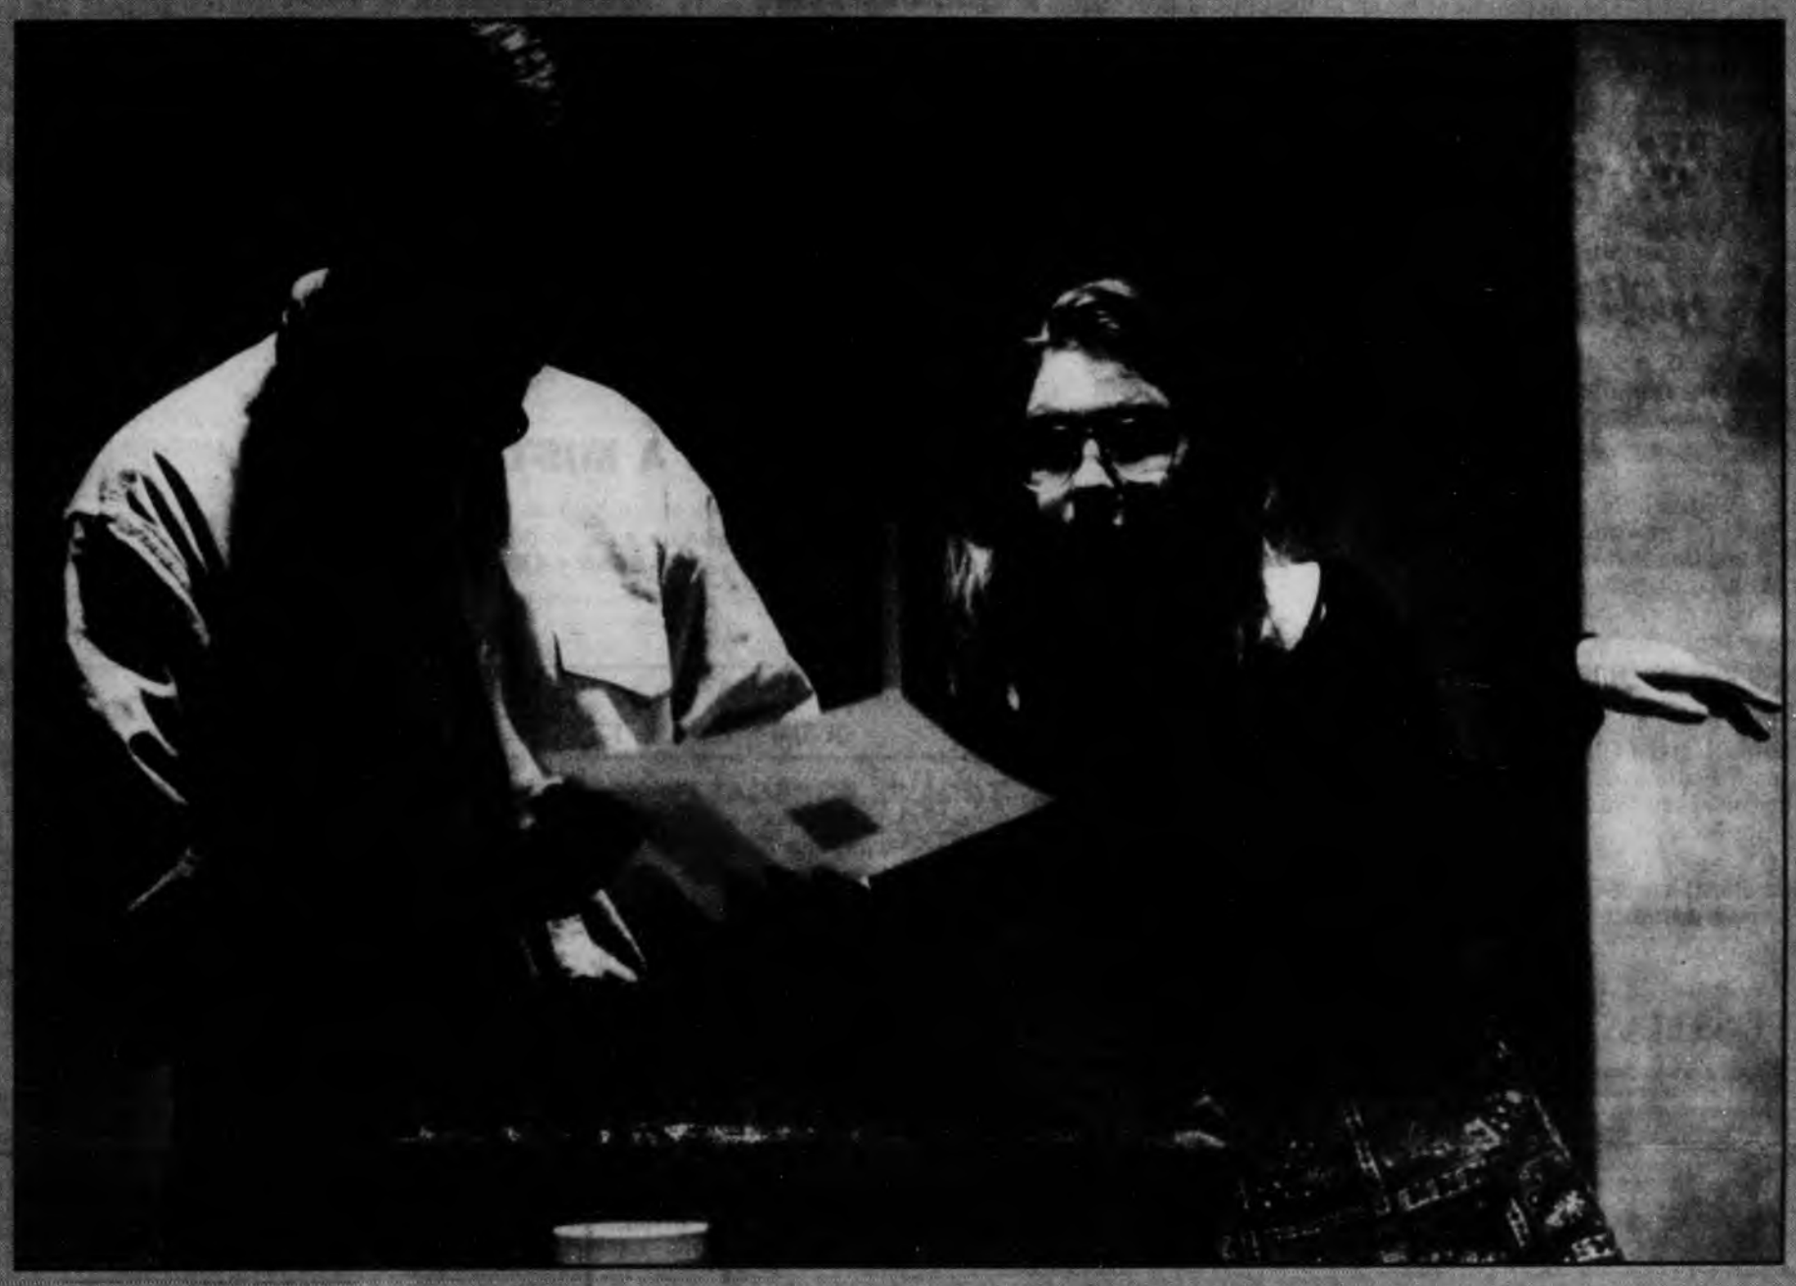
NEWS DIGEST

▶LESBIAN ALLOWED TO STAY IN ARMY

KANSAS CITY, Kan. (AP) — The U.S. Army has been temporarily barred from discharging a Fort Leavenworth major who acknowledged that she had a lesbian relationship for nearly a decade.

A federal judge granted a restraining order after Maj. Joyce Walmer sued the Army and U.S. Department of Defense Thursday morning in Kansas City, Kan., just hours before an honorable discharge she fought for 10 months was to take effect.

▶VOLCANO SPEWS ROCK ON COLOMBIA



BOGOTA, Colombia (AP) — A volcano being studied by top researchers erupted Thursday, spewing a huge column of ash and killing at least six scientists taking gas samples on its side, according to the Colombian Red Cross.

Eight other scientists — three Americans and five Colombians — were injured and 10 were missing, the Red Cross said.

The names of those killed or injured were not immediately available.

It also was not known if any Americans were killed.

Debaters ranked No. 2 in nation

The K-State debate team invited 11 of the top debate teams from around the country to participate in the K-State Round Robin Debate Tournament Wednesday and Thursday.

The tournament was won by Southwest Missouri State in the junior division, with K-State taking third. In the senior division, Emporia State University came in first with the K-State team placing a close second.

In the two divisions, there were 32 students representing schools from across the country.

"This is the first tournament that we have hosted in about eight years," Susan Stanfield, K-State debate coach, said.

Teams invited to the tournament were North Dakota University, Gonzaga University, San Diego State University, Emory College, University of Missouri at Kansas City, Emporia State University, South Western College, Michigan State University, Macallester College, John Carroll University and Southwest Missouri State.

The debate topic for this semester deals with whether the United Nation's implementation of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights is more important than preserving state sovereignty.

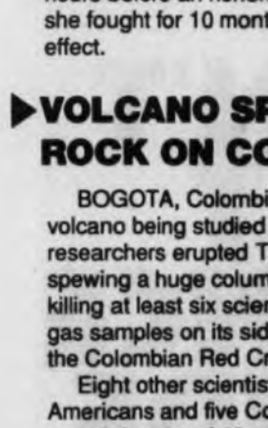
The declaration, adopted in 1949, deals with intervention of the UN in human rights abuses throughout the world, Stanfield said.

She said this tournament, along with the K-State Spring 1993 Debate Tournament that is being held this weekend, will help draw attention to the organization and will reflect well upon the University.

"K-State is a prime location to host debate tournaments," said David Filippi, assistant debate coach and tournament director and graduate student in speech. "We are centrally located, and the tournaments attract the attention of upcoming debaters from some of the top high schools around the country."

The team is currently ranked second in the country, according to the Cross Examination Debate Association.

"This semester is going great," Jill Baisinger, senior in history and Spanish, said. "We have two of the top teams in the country and a lot of depth in talent."



The team regularly finishes with three or four debaters in the top five speakers points at a tournament, Filippi said.

"We're very pleased with such a diverse draw of teams from Florida to California for this tournament," team member Teri Richardson, junior in psychology, said.

Community to celebrate King's dream, legacy

Candlelight vigil kicks off week, recognizes contributions

MEGAN MULLIKIN
Collegian

A dedicated walk through campus begins activities for the King Observance Week.

Veryl Switzer, co-chairman of the King Observance Week's activities, said the memorial walk has become a traditional way to honor Martin Luther King Jr.

"It has become part of tradition. The march is part of history, and it is a symbol of Dr. King's marches," Switzer said.

The march will begin at 6 p.m. Monday at Waters Hall and end at All Faiths Chapel, where a special candlelight vigil is scheduled, said Jayson Strickland, senior in elementary education and president of the Alpha Phi Alpha fraternity.

The Alphas pioneered the event and have been sponsoring it for more than 20 years. King was a member of the fraternity, Strickland said.

The candlelight vigil is used to recognize King for his contribution to society and his incredible efforts through the years, Switzer said.

"He was a minister, of course, and the candles show a kind of worshiping of his work," he said.

Strickland said the vigil will feature several speakers, testimonies and two performances — a dramatic reading and United Black Voices.

"The last thing will be the actual lighting of the candles," Strickland said. "We will also sing 'We Shall Overcome' and make a re-dedication of the dream."

"You hear in history books about Martin Luther King, but a lot of times people don't live up to the dream," Strickland said. "I think the re-dedication of the dream is the most important. He is a man that needs to be recognized."

Reggie McGowan said he believed the events are important to the K-State campus because students of higher education should realize King's contributions to society.

Polynesian dancers, poetry, speeches and fashion shows will help Manhattan Town Center kick off its celebration of Martin Luther King Jr. Day.

The multicultural fair will be during mall hours Saturday, Sunday and Monday. A center stage will be set up for performances near the main fountain. An art gallery featuring artwork from local schools will be located near the JC Penney store.

"The artwork is geared toward multiculturalism and Martin Luther King Day, as well as an essay contest from the high school," Shannon Maddux, marketing and advertising director for Manhattan Town Center, said.

"The entertainment is geared toward showing culture through music, singing, poetry readings, etc. There is also a fashion show that shows how fashion has been influenced by culture," Maddux said.

They are expecting over 30,000 people.

Plans to grow gardens germinating

Construction will begin in summer; donations to fund botanical project

STAR HILDENBRAND
Collegian

Despite the cold temperatures and snowy weather, faculty members are thinking about K-State's springtime landscape.

A plan to use 12 acres of the University's property for botanical gardens is being organized by Tom Warner, head of the horticulture, forestry and recreation resources department, and William Winslow, associate professor of landscape architecture.

Winslow, who was hired to create plans for the gardens, presented his ideas to the Garden Advisory Board Wednesday.

"The Garden Advisory Board is designed to estimate the costs of the gardens and how to raise funds for the project," Tim Keene, professor of landscape architecture, said.

The board members are from the University and the community, Warner said.

Eventually, Warner and Winslow said they will present their plans to faculty, students and the community with the hope to begin construction this summer.

"Construction of the gardens should begin sometime in the early or latter part of this summer," Warner said. "Since the money still needs to be raised, it will take about five years before it is completely finished."

The estimated $1-2 million needed to build the gardens, and the $5 million desired to create a fund to maintain the gardens will come entirely from public donations.

"Probably what will happen will be that individuals who donate money will have a part of the garden named after them," Warner said.

The outdoor botanical gardens will enhance the existing ornamental plant collection in the conservatory on Denison Avenue, Warner said. Nine acres of the gardens will be located near the Veterinary Medicine Complex.

The other three acres to be developed are west of the Dairy Barn, he said. The small limestone barn, which currently stores vehicles, will be converted into a visitor's center.

"The gardens will be developed, installed and maintained by K-State horticultural students," Warner said. "They will serve as an outdoor laboratory."

Landscape architecture students in the classes of Keene and Winslow helped to create the preliminary designs for the botanical gardens, which were further refined by Michael Larson, a landscape architecture graduate.

"Besides serving as a place for students to learn, the gardens are designed to be educational — a place where the public can visit to come away with plant material in a garden setting," he said.

The design will feature ponds and an amphitheater where students may decide to have theatrical productions, Warner said.

"Eventually we anticipate having one of the best ornamental plant collections in the Midwest," he said.

HOMELESS

Shelters last choice despite cold

If you think walking to class in the cold weather is uncomfortable, try living without a home.

Directors of area homeless shelters said the cold weather attracts more visitors, but generally the numbers in the winter months are only slightly higher than other months.

Sonya Redmon, executive director of Manhattan Emergency Shelter Inc., said although the cold weather hits the Manhattan homeless hard, there has been little increase in occupants at the shelter.

"In the winter months and right after the holidays, people will normally find a way to stay where they are. People know it will be cold, and they find a way to pay the bills. But the cold does make it harder for people to pay electric and other bills.

"The shelter is generally used as a last resort, which is the way it should be," Redmon said.

"Most of the time, the reason that people come to the shelter is because of poor planning with money," she said. "The people who come to this shelter are people who normally have had places to live."

Redmon said the number of guests is about as high during the spring and summer because of transients who stay at the shelter while looking for a job.

Topeka and Junction City shelters have seen an increase in occupants because of the cold weather.

"We have seen an increase, no doubt," said Marge Roberts of the Let's Help shelter in Topeka.

"Usually after the holidays, it's a slow time, but we haven't had a January this severe in a long time."

If the cold weather continues, more people will come in, said Cathy Wilson, director of the Open Door shelter in Junction City.

"We are planning on more people in the next few weeks," Wilson said.

Resignation prompts questions

THE ISSUE

The resignation of K-State Athletic Director Milt Richards shows a path of inaccuracy.

WE SUGGEST

The K-State administration and athletic department should cut the conflict of responsibility and decide who is in charge of

There are some curious goings-on surrounding the resignation of Milt Richards.

When Richards was first hired in August 1991, he was asked to emphasize a balanced budget and spearhead fund-raising projects for the Department of Intercollegiate Athletics.

According to budget reports for the 1992 fiscal year, K-State athletics operated in the black for the first time in seven years. Fund-raising projects hit a record high $1.2 million, and the construction of several new athletic facilities — including a press box and an indoor practice facility — have been put into motion under Richards' direction.

Then Milt "resigned."

Or did he?

It seems odd that a university with the financial problems that K-State claims to have would honor an $85,000 yearly contract for a man who up and left the school.

It seems odd that Richards is just the latest in a steady stream of athletic directors to "resign" before he has had a chance to unpack his bags — the third under the administration of President Jon Wefald.

By drilling it into our heads that the circumstances surrounding Richards' resignation are due primarily to a lack of K-State ties, the University's administration has set the stage for one of two things — either K-State is going to bypass a worthy candidate, citing a lack of K-State ties, or set itself up for a similar situation just 16 months down the road.

Athletics are the primary window through which a university is viewed. Under Wefald's direction, the K-State administration has finally come to realize this.

What Anderson Hall hasn't come to grips with, however, is how to let the athletic department run itself.

There's no better time than the present.

READERS WRITE

RESIGNATION

Athletics included in administrations realm

Editor,

Members of the print and broadcast media have done a disservice to athletics and to the University as a whole in their sometimes virulent attacks upon the administration concerning the resignation of Milt Richards.

Ron Paradis perhaps set the tone for such attacks in his Wednesday evening broadcast which, in summary, challenged President Jon Wefald to concern himself only with curriculum and leave the heavy stuff — athletics — to the guys who understood such things.

Lesser detractors were more inclined to dwell upon some kind of conspiratorial machinations emanating from the bowels of Anderson Hall. But the central theme of all attacks is that the whole affair is simply unfair and represents the will of only a few acting in perhaps a whimsical, or even vengeful, manner.

I remind all complaintants that Anderson Hall does indeed house the administration of the University and that collegiate athletics is indeed a part of the University.

By the suggestion that the administration concern itself with curriculum, the broadcaster implies that our splendid students, who are also athletes, are an oddity of some kind.

The writers and broadcasters who genuinely care for the University would be well advised to devote a column to K-State's excellent academic records and leave decisions concerning the athletic department to the administration.

Another Russian winter ...

SHAWN WOODFORD

"The Soviet Union is temporary — Russia is eternal." — Charles DeGaulle

I have seen the face of communism. Well, to be more precise, I have seen two apple-cheeked, giggling, four-year-old faces of former communists in what is now the former Soviet Union.

As I recently sat in the Moscow apartment of my new friend Vitya, under playful siege by his four-year-old twin daughters Katya and Genia, all I could think was, "We spent nearly two trillion dollars in the 1980s to make sure we had enough nukes to turn an atmospheric physicist and his little girls into radioactive glaze?"

I had been introduced to Vitya and his family by a friend who teaches here at K-State, who had also brought Christmas gifts for Katya and Genia. There may be no more gratifying sound in this universe than the gasps of a four-year-old ripping open a package to discover a Barbie doll, a relatively common thing in America but virtually unobtainable by the average Russian.

Vitya is a world-class scientist, a member of the prestigious Academy of Sciences, yet he spends hours of time, which could be better devoted to research, hustling enough money to feed his family.

In America, he would probably be on the faculty of Yale or MIT. As a Russian academic, Vitya is better off than most, with his own car and a three-room apartment.

Try as I might, I could not find anybody worth nuking while touring around Moscow and St. Petersburg. Although, I think the guard who would not let me back into the Hermitage Museum after I went out to find a bathroom with some toilet paper could have done with a good swift kick in the kiester.

Instead I found some of the most gracious and friendly people I have ever met, from the deaf-mute boy who tried to give me directions along Nevsky Prospekt, to the vendor on the Arbat, who recited the names of all the U.S. presidents and showed me a picture of his family while trying to sell me an Order of the Great Patriotic War, second class, which I bought for $6.

For more than 70 years, the Russian people lived under a regime that robbed and persecuted them in the name of the "people." Now they are once again being screwed by economic circumstances rooted in the utter bankruptcy of the now-defunct Communist Party and an inexplicable apathy on the part of the West.

It is wholly amazing that these people can maintain their civility and pride in the face of a painfully precarious future.

Words cannot convey the look of confusion and fear in the eyes of some of the older pensioners who beg for rubles in the streets because the Russian government, in order to save money, has not adjusted their stipends to cover the costs of the 2,000-percent inflation.

Having grown up in a society that demanded ever greater sacrifices for the "good of the rodina (motherland)," an increasingly popular response by the aged to a future of uncertainty is to hang themselves.

The women of St. Petersburg are known throughout Russia for their beauty. Now, more and more of them turn to working for the Russian mob as prostitutes in the hotels that cater to foreign tourists. Some even are traveling to work in Chinese hotels, where the list of acts that they will perform for cash reads almost like a menu.

Somehow, despite all of the despair about the future, life in Russia goes on. My K-State friend believes the greatest attribute of the Russian people is their endurance.

It is extremely fortunate that Lenin decided to move the seat of the new Bolshevik government from St. Petersburg in 1917 because it spared the city from 70-odd years of overgrowth with square, squat buildings symbolizing the triumph of socialism.

St. Petersburg's founder, Peter the Great, decreed that no structure could be built higher than the spire over the Peter Paul Fortress. To this day, the skyline remains much as it was when the city was first built.

As much as this site embodies the history of Russia before the revolution, it also represents the recent retreat from Communism. In 1991, the city voted to change back its name from Leningrad, as it had been known since 1924.

Just this week, the remains of Tsar Nicholas II, murdered by Lenin's order in 1918, were conclusively identified by British scientists. With Boris Yeltsin's apparent blessing, the mayor of St. Petersburg has indicated that the tsar's remains will be buried in the Peter Paul Fortress, the traditional resting place of Russian monarchs since Peter. This act, unimaginable just two short years ago, is a measure of how much things have changed.

Not everyone is convinced by the pace of change, however. Vitya thinks that things may change enough so that eventually his children will live in a better world.

For his sake, and for the sake of little Katya and Genia, I hope he is wrong, and the changes come sooner rather than later.

Harnessing the pitbulls for Bill

New Clinton era to solve many societal dilemmas

TOM LISTER

Boy, was I thrown for a loop.

Down in Corpus Christi on break, during my daily period of reading and vigorous self-analysis, I saw him. His wistful face gleamed up from the cover of Time like an ad for pork rinds.

They were selling more than pork rinds, though. They were selling us a new president. It was Bill Clinton, "Man of the Year."

I damn near fell off the toilet.

Honestly, I hadn't expected old Bill to get it, just as I hadn't expected Hillary to get "Woman of the Year" for Newsweek. The press is so generous, especially during the Christmas season.

But think about what they've done for us all year.

For one, they increased voter turnout. This year we had voter participation from people who had never considered voting before.

I mean, that's great. Hordes of people who once before were totally content munching corn chips and watching MTV learned to take part in the democratic process. These are the people we need. When they weren't watching C+C Music Factory videos, these people discovered what Bill Clinton could do for this country.

He could "change" it. That wasn't just a key marketing term, either. It was THE TRUTH. And it still is. By turning the invisible reins of the country over to Clinton, we're going to ride into a new, blissfully flawless America.

Here are a few of the headlines we can expect to see in the next four years:

"Total global, ethnic harmony achieved."

"Marijuana legalized for medicinal purposes."

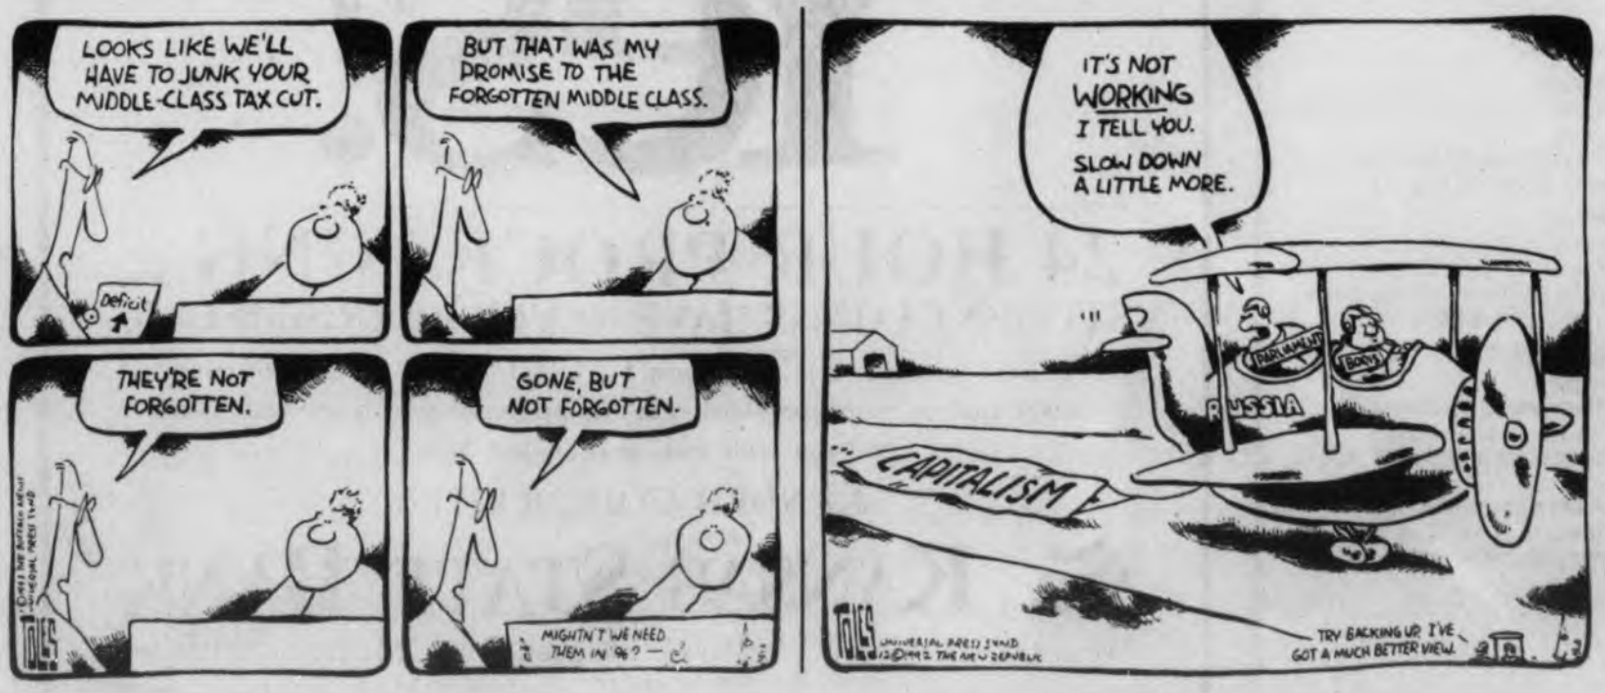
"Glaucoma cases skyrocket."

"Bachman Turner Overdrive plays surprise gig at Blue River Pub."

"Food stamps go toward cigarettes."

"Chelsea sees educational film on public schools."

"AIDS research prioritized for increased funding."



"The mysterious heterosexual disease, cancer."

So harness the pitbulls, Bill — we're heading into a new era. If we inhale enough this time and listen to Fleetwood Mac, we ought to make it by sunrise.

And whatever you do, man, don't stop thinking about tomorrow.

It'll soon be here.

Cavalry troops deployed to Kuwait

ASSOCIATED PRESS

FORT HOOD, Texas — With a Persian Gulf War veteran in command, about 1,000 Fort Hood soldiers prepared Wednesday to fly to Kuwait in the wake of U.S. and allied air strikes on Iraq.

"As you can see, Fort Hood soldiers are on the move again," said Lt. Gen. H.G. "Pete" Taylor, commander of the sprawling post in central Texas.

"They will go in there, draw their tanks — their equipment is already on the ground there — and go out and exercise ... and be prepared for any other mission the command structure over there might give them," Taylor said.

When asked if the troops would move into Iraq, Taylor said while their deployment was obviously connected to Wednesday's air strike, "they are going into Kuwait."

"There are not plans that I am aware of to go further than Kuwait," he said.

For some members of the 1st Cavalry Division, it may be their third time in Kuwait. They were involved in retaking the tiny country from Iraq during the Gulf War and some returned last year for training maneuvers.

Taylor said Col. Leon LaPorte will lead the battalion-sized unit. LaPorte was chief of staff for the 1st Cavalry during the Persian Gulf War.

Refugee policy will stay

Clinton supports quick return, says sea escapes too dangerous

"Haitians should count on themselves first, and then see what other people can do."

MARLENE DOUFEUILLE
director of the Permanent Refugee Service

ASSOCIATED PRESS

PORT-AU-PRINCE, Haiti — Haitians reacted bitterly to President-elect Clinton's decision Thursday to keep President Bush's tough, quick-return policy for people fleeing this desperately poor Caribbean nation.

Humanitarian aid officials said they didn't know if the news would discourage Haitians from risking their lives at sea to flee political persecution and economic hardship.

In interviews before Clinton's announcement, some failed refugees said there was nothing he could do to stop them from trying again.

U.S. policy-makers and south Florida officials have worried that up to 100,000 Haitians would set sail for Miami after Wednesday's inauguration. Clinton had encouraged Haitians by attacking Bush's practice of quickly sending back boat people on the ground most fled poverty, not political repression.

Marlene Doufeuille, director of the private Permanent Refugee Service, said Thursday's developments should teach this nation a bitter lesson — "Haitians should count on themselves first, and then see what other people can do."

Clinton's Voice of America message to the Haitian people boomed out from a radio on the airport tarmac as scores of people who tried to flee were being repatriated from Cuba.

As he spoke, the U.S. Coast Guard was returning 140 more boat people plucked from 8-foot-high seas Wednesday night off northern Haiti.

None of them showed much emotion when told of Clinton's decision. Under the watchful eyes of police, few even professed to know who he was.

They preferred to speak of their reasons for leaving, and several said they envisioned dying at sea.

Madelva Fleurilis, a 22-year-old mother of three from Gonaives, said she left because "I have kids. There's no work." She said she sold fruit on the street until business vanished.

Asked if she would attempt the voyage again, she shook her head. "No, because I didn't succeed," she said. "I went, they got me."

Dennis Hankins, refugee coordinator for the U.S. Embassy, said his 29-member unit was processing 100 claims a week by people seeking political asylum. He said about 15,000 people have filed claims in Haiti since a September 1991 military coup ousted Haiti's first democratically elected president, Jean-Bertrand Aristide, and touched off a political and economic crisis. Of the 15,000, a little more than 300 have been approved, Hankins said.

More than 40,000 Haitians have taken to the seas since that bloody coup.

Ivonne Villanueva, head of UNICEF's extensive organization in Haiti, was among humanitarian officials expressing sadness over Clinton's announcement.

"Oh dear!" she said over the telephone. "The people had expected a liberalization of the refugee policy."

She said she was uncertain what Haitians planning to leave would do.

"I'm not sure, because the situation in other parts of the country continues to get worse. It's a choice between two bad options."

Courses provide a change

Intersession a chance to teach current, unusual topics and travel

PAMELA WRIGHT
Collegian

Intersession exposes students to topics and courses that are not offered during the fall or spring sessions.

Instructors who have a special interest or research they want to share send in a proposal and get it approved by their department, Cynthia Trent, intersession coordinator, said.

It is a way to offer in-depth insight or present a topic that would not be appropriate in a regular class, Alfred Cochran, professor of music, said. He teaches Country Music: History and Style.

Trent said it is also a way to study current topics, and some classes are trips to study new topics.

Some of the courses offered were as follows: Golf Course Planning and Design, Special Topics in Sports and Medicine and Personal Computer Applications. Trips to Australia, New Zealand, England and Washington, D.C. were offered as intersession classes.

Students take the courses for a variety of reasons.

"Some courses count as internships — that gives the students hands-on training they couldn't get in a regular session," Trent said.

Students also like intersession because they are able to concentrate on one subject and raise their grade point average.

It also gives a student the chance to take a class of special interest that may not be offered again, or it's simply something to do during break, Trent said.

"Enrollment has dropped down a little, but with fewer cancellations," Trent said. "The classes had healthy enrollments."

Most of the students are K-State students, with others from the community or other institutions, he said.

Students from the community use the intersession classes as a way to get re-certified in a particular area or to explore their interests. Students from other institutions enroll to take advantage of classes not offered anywhere else.

"Thirty to 50 different classes are offered. Most courses are electives, even though some will fulfill requirements," Trent said.

Laura Smith, junior in social science, took Computer Applications and Stress Management. She said she took the classes as electives and enjoyed it.

Athletic director turnover continues

STEVEN ROCK
Collegian

Milt Richards' resignation from the position of K-State athletic director marked the fourth time in seven years the athletic department's high post has changed hands.

"When you have so many people in such a little time, there's something wrong," former Athletic Director Milt Richards said. "I think all you have to do is look at the track record, and make your own judgments."

That track record includes the third time since 1986, when President Jon Wefald first came to K-State, that an athletic director has resigned.

But, Wefald said, it's the job — not the University.

"There's nothing particular to K-State," he said. "I guess I don't see that. To be an AD anywhere in the country, you have to be good in all aspects, both the internal and the external.

"If you talk to any AD, anywhere in the country, at the very least, he would say it's a tough and demanding job."

Bob Krause, K-State vice president, will be coordinating the overall activities of the athletic department on an interim basis. He also plays a significant role in the hiring of Wildcat athletic directors.

ATHLETIC DIRECTORS

Z.G. Cleavenger	1918-20
Mike Ahearn	1920-46
Thurlo McCrady	1947-51
Laurence "Moon" Mullins	1951-56
Bebe Lee	1956-69
Ernie Barrett	1969-77
Jersey Jermier	1977-78
DeLoss Dodds	1978-80
Dick Towers	1981-85
Larry Travis	1985-88
Steve Miller	1988-91
Milt Richards	Aug. 1991-Jan. 1993

"It's a very tough position," he said. "There's a variety of skills that are necessary. You almost have to be a jailhouse lawyer, the book is so thick.

"It's a complex and very large business."

Richards, who was asked to place an emphasis on balanced budgets, resigned Jan. 5 after less than 17 months on the job. He speculated that perhaps it was necessary for someone without K-State ties to come to the University and clean up the fiscal house.

"I think that would be a positive interpretation," Wefald said.

With the athletic budget operating in the black for the first time in seven years, it was time, Richards said, to move on.

As a part of the mutual agreement, K-State will honor the final year and a half of Richards' $85,000 yearly contract — something the University didn't do in 1991, when Steve Miller resigned to take a job with Nike.

Why was Richards' resignation handled differently than Miller's?

"That's a very tough question," Wefald said. "Each situation is different. We just did what we felt was in the best interest of all concerned."

Changes at the athletic director position affect more than the athletic department's administration — it affects Wildcat coaches as well.

"You get a little uptight because you don't know what kind of person they'll bring in," baseball coach Mike Clark said. "Baseball is not a revenue sport, and you always have to re-establish that relationship.

"I'm not losing sleep over it, but there's always that concern."

Richards said he'd rather not expand upon what the problems with the administration might be.

"I think it's a difficult position, but I'd rather not speculate, because, as I've said before, I want to leave on the up."

Wefald said the concerns of the athletic department can't be ignored.

"Athletics is a such big business today, and it's far more important than it should be," he said.

"But when you're running a university like this, all of us have to pay attention to it."

Can K-State break the KU Jinx?

Jayhawks have won 9 straight games on K-State's hardwood

SCOTT ABEL
Collegian

Les Craft, Eddie Elder, Ed Galvao — these are three of the players on the last Wildcat team to beat the University of Kansas in Manhattan.

If you don't recognize these names, it's because that was 1983.

The Jayhawks will go for their 10th win in a row on K-State's home floor when they enter Bramlage Coliseum for Monday night's nationally televised matchup, beginning at 8:30 p.m.

KU has now won 19 of its last 23 games against the Wildcats, including six meetings over the last three years.

What has been the secret of the Jayhawks' success in Manhattan?

"I think they've had better teams," K-State coach Dana Altman said. "They were a better basketball team than we were a year ago, and they beat us.

"Two years ago, the same thing can be said. Three years ago, they put it on us pretty good. We've just got to keep scratching and fighting and see if we can get one back."

Mitch Holthus, "Voice of the Wildcats" since the 1984-85 season, said that the streak by the Jayhawks has seen a little of everything.

"Carl Henry hit a buzzer-beater to get their first win in Manhattan (1984). Billy Ray Smith has an uncontested six-footer in the lane that rolls off (1989).

"There have been some blowouts, like the 64-50 game when they had their first Final Four team of this era. But you take out about four plays out of the streak, and it could be at least even. It has been uncanny."

Last year's matchup saw Jayhawk guard Steve Woodberry hit a running jump shot in the lane as time expired, giving KU a 54-52 win.

"Last year we almost had them," said guard Askia Jones, who has seen three KU-K-State games in Manhattan.

"That last second shot — I don't want to call it luck, but they're real fortunate. We had a chance last year, and the year before was pretty close," he said.

"Coming into this game, you just never know, really."

Things won't be easier for the Wildcats in the game this season. KU is currently ranked fourth in the national polls and defeated 10th-ranked Oklahoma on the road early this week.

"There certainly isn't an intimidation factor coming in," Holthus said of next Monday's game. "And that's been proven when you win nine straight times.

"It's almost a subconscious feeling that you can be successful in a place."

Jack Hartman, former K-State coach from 1970 through 1986, said that feeling is one that his Wildcat teams have had in other Big Eight arenas.

"Good things tend to happen there more so than not," he said.

"We felt comfortable playing at Missouri, and strangely enough, comfortable playing at Kansas.

"We never did feel comfortable at Oklahoma State, even though we were real successful there."

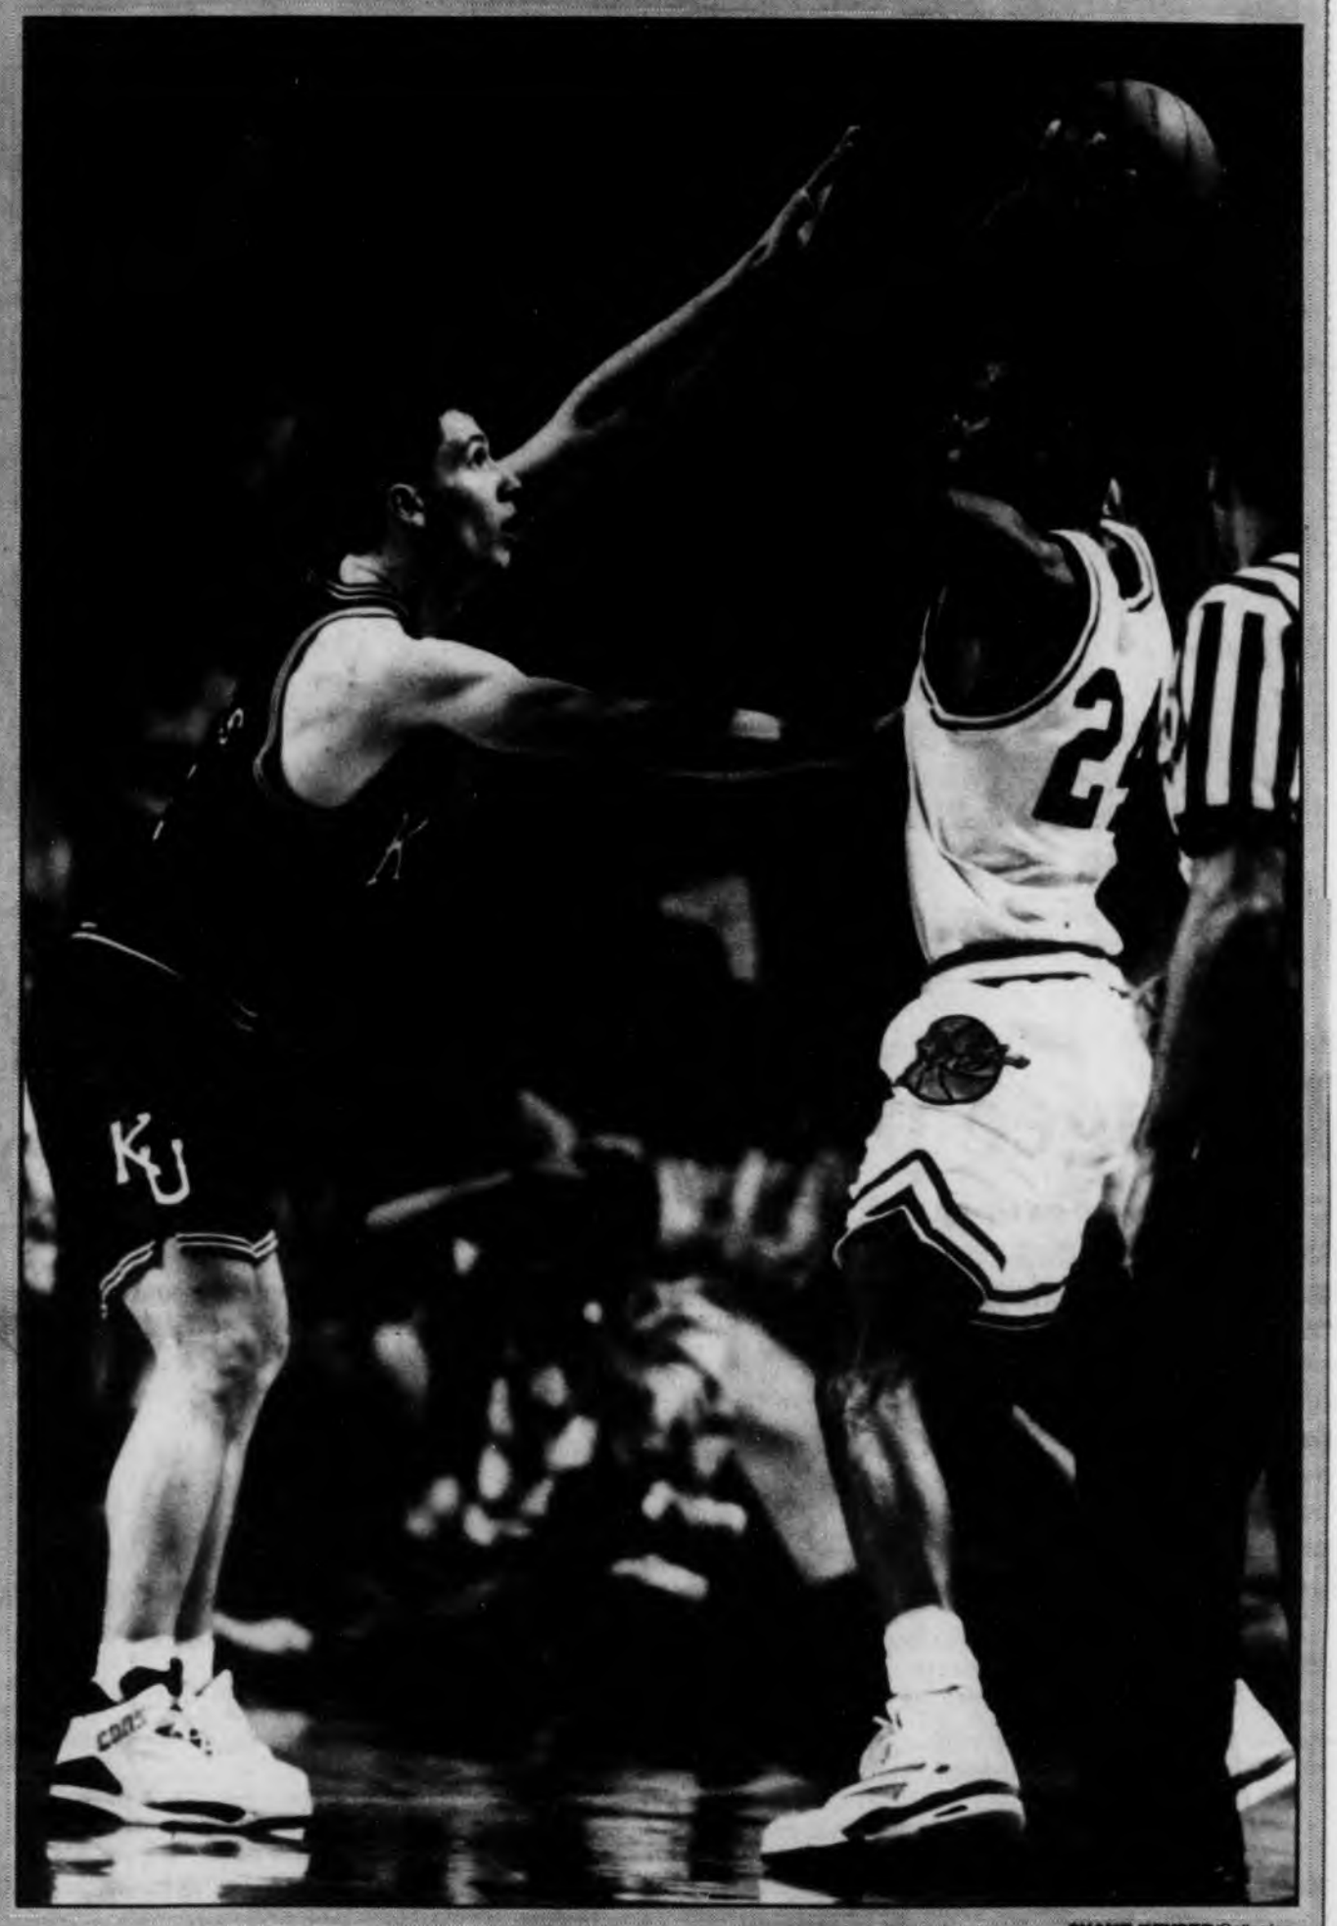
K-State sophomore Brian Henson, who was guarding Steve Woodberry on his game-winning shot last year, is excited about the rematch.

"It's a good opportunity for us," he said. "I feel real confident this year, and I'm looking forward to the contest."

Is there hope for K-State?

"Kansas has been on a good run of teams," Holthus said. "Maybe Kansas State hasn't been on a good run, but there have been a lot of close shots, too — tons of them.

"That could turn around at some point."



Hartman said he feels like K-State chances will be good Monday.

"I feel optimistic," he said. "K-State's playing very well right now, and Kansas has had some trouble this year.

"It's a very fickle game, and when you have two rivals, there will be streaks here and there," he said. "It's just part of basketball."

Colorado is first weekend test for Cats

BRIAN ANDERSON
Collegian

K-State has the chance to open conference play 2-0 Saturday afternoon when the Cats host the Colorado Buffaloes at Bramlage Coliseum.

And if history repeats itself, the Cats will have a good chance of doing just that. K-State holds a commanding 43-3 lead over Colorado in games played in Manhattan. The last Colorado win here was in 1964.

A win over the Buffaloes would be K-State's best start in Big Eight play since the 1987-88 season. Overall, the 9-2 Cats are off to their best start since 1981-82.

Colorado, 7-5 for the season and 0-1 in the conference, downed SUNY-Buffalo 95-50 Wednesday night in Boulder.

The Buffaloes have lost four of their last six games, including a two-point loss to the University of Missouri-Kansas City.

The game with Colorado comes just two days before the Cats meet intrastate rival Kansas.

But the two Wildcat seniors are not looking past this weekend's game in anticipation of the nationally televised Monday game with Kansas.

"We have to execute well against them," forward Vincent Jackson said. "Our defense is going to dictate the game."

And forward Aaron Collier said K-State can't look solely at Colorado's record.

"We can't overlook them," he said.

The focus for the team is on Buffalo sophomore Donnie Boyce.

"He has a good feel for the game," Coach Dana Altman said. "He scored a lot of points last year."

The 6-foot-5-inch guard became the Buffaloes all-time freshman scorer last season with 417 points in 28 games, an average of 14.9 points a game.

This season, Boyce is leading the team in scoring with 19 points per game. He has either led or tied the team in points in eight of the 12 games.

Colorado returns with its top rebounder and shot-blocker, Poncho Hodges.

"He is an aggressive rebounder," Jackson said. "We have to be aggressive inside."

Also, Hodges became the highest single-season shot blocker for Colorado last year with 73 swats. In 12 games, he has 26 blocks andg 12.7 points a game for Colorado.

K-State swept both games last season, including 62-56 in Manhattan.

Stires' basketball career has been one crazy ride

TONYA FOSTER
Collegian

Basketball has been an uphill challenge for Lady Cat sophomore Shanele Stires.

But, in this, her second time around, she has achieved her dream.

Stires, who left K-State after her freshman year to play for Cloud County Community College, is back.

And this time, she has proven to be an inside threat for the Lady Cats. She is ranked sixth in the conference in scoring and second in rebounding.

Stires, a 5-foot-11-inch forward, is the leading scorer and rebounder for the Lady Cats, averaging 14.4 points and 8.9 rebounds a game.

"I hate to think where we'd be without her," Lady Cat coach Susan Yow said. "She is a tremendous asset."

Stires was named the most valuable player and a member of the all-tournament team in the University of North Carolina-Wilmington Tournament during the semester break.

Her 32 points and 27 rebounds led the Lady Cats to the tournament title.

"It's nothing you go out and make a mental attempt to do," Stires said. "I didn't think I was going to make the all-tournament team — I was the last one selected."

Yow said that although Stires has come a long way, there is room for improvement.

"She still needs to improve on fundamentals on offense and defense," Yow said. "I've seen improvement from two weeks ago."

And Stires is quick to acknowledge that, mentally, she still has a long way to go.

"They are still better players than I am," she said. "I respect what they do so much more than my own abilities because they are competent and knowledgeable about what is going on. They know how to lead the team."

Stires has endured many challenges in her basketball career — her first when she was cut from her eighth-grade basketball team.

"It just cracks me up because none of them could play a lick — and to think I was worse than that just cracks me up," she said.

After a successful senior season at Salina Central high school, in which she claimed second-team all-state honors, Stires almost hung up her basketball shoes. It was the track coaches, not the basketball recruiters, who were knocking down her door.

Stires decided to put her dreams of playing college basketball behind her. Her first trip to K-State landed her a track scholarship. She placed in the top three at the 1990 track and field Big Eight indoor and outdoor championships.

But, Stires said, she still missed the hardwood.

Stires decided to take a hiatus from track and play basketball at Cloud County Community College — and, eventually, have a shot at her dream to play Division I basketball.

She said she watched a lot of basketball during that time.

"If I wouldn't have decided to go to junior college, I would still be watching those games," she said.

She earned first-team Region VI and first-team Independent League honors during the 1991-92 season.

"Junior college was more fun because it was less work. It was still competitive, and there were good players," Stires said. "It was score, score, score — the finer points were never stressed."

Her most recent setback was the death of her mother in September.

"Several times I came close to quitting," Stires said. "It is nothing I see in myself or my future — it's that she would want me to stay in school and to continue doing what I am doing."

"She had to come face-to-face with something we all have to face sometime," Yow said. "She just had to do it sooner. I think she has handled it well, and she has been an inspiration."

But, Stires said, she is just doing what she knows how to do best.

"When I do something, I like to go all out," she said.

"I think I'm more or less a fighter. I just go out and compete as best as I can and the best I know how."

Lady Cats take 7-4 record into key Big 8 games

TONYA FOSTER

After losing their first two conference games — to Missouri and Colorado — the Lady Cats hope to improve their winless Big Eight record. K-State, 7-4, will square off against Iowa State at 7 p.m. Friday and Nebraska at 2 p.m. Sunday. Both games will be played at Bramlage Coliseum.

The Lady Cats are ranked ninth in the nation in scoring defensive, holding their opponents to 55.2 points a game. But they are scoring just 59 points a game, seventh in the Big Eight.

"We need to improve on our offensive efficiency," Coach Susan Yow said. "We need to be able to execute what we've been doing this week."

Iowa State is 1-13, 0-2 in the conference.

Yow said the team cannot afford to play Iowa State's record, though the Cyclones are going through a rough time.

"They are with a new coach and system," Yow said. "They are working through things."

The leading scorer for the Cyclones is 5-foot 11-inch forward Shanda Fitzgerald, who is averaging 9.7 points a game. Barb Gordon, 6-1, is the center and leading rebounder, with 8.4 rebounds per game.

"On paper, we're supposed to beat Iowa State, but you have to show up and play the game," Lady Cat forward Shanele Stires said. "It's going to be a good game."

The Huskers are the No. 22 team in the nation with a record of 10-3 and 1-1 in the conference.

One area of concern for K-State is that the Lady Cats have averaged nearly 24 turnovers per game.

But Yow said she does'n tell the team to stop turning over the ball because it does not work.

"I tell them 'let's pass and catch, let's be a smarter basketball team, and that'll take care of your turnovers,'" Yow said.

Nebraska has three returning starters, including 6-2 senior forward Karen Jennings. She is an all-American candidate and became the second Husker to break the 2,000-point barrier. A year ago, Jennings scored 48 points in an 87-82 Nebraska win against K-State.

"She's a key player for them," Yow said. "We can't forget about the rest of the team. They have some good players."

Guard Meggan Yedsena will also be starting for the Huskers. She is leading in assists for Nebraska with six per game.

"We're looking for more people to get involved on offense," Nebraska coach Angela Beck said. "K-State is a much improved team. They will play a hard-fought contest against us."

"On paper, we're supposed to beat Iowa State."

Ward injures knee, out for season

Lady Cat forward Joey Ward suffered a season-ending knee injury Wednesday afternoon at practice, bringing the number of players on the K-State squad to nine.

Ward suffered a tear to the anterior cruciate ligament — the same injury that plagued Wildcat running back Eric Gallon. Coach Susan Yow said she expects Ward to have surgery within 10 days.

The injury to Ward, coupled with Pam Stoltz's recent decision to return home to Minnesota, leaves the Lady Cats with nine players on the active roster.

"It's going to be a tough road," Yow said. "We've never been in this predicament before, and I'm interested to see how we respond."

"It will do whatever we allow it to do. It's just a matter of how individuals allow it to affect them. It really depends on the make of our team.

Ward, a sophomore, played in 10 of the Lady Cats' 11 games. She averaged 2.3 points and 1.1 rebounds per game.

"Our game plan is not changing, but we have to shuffle players around," Yow said." A few more people will play a few more positions."

KU pummels Oral Roberts, 140-72

Hawks took 48-9 lead at one point of 13th win

ASSOCIATED PRESS

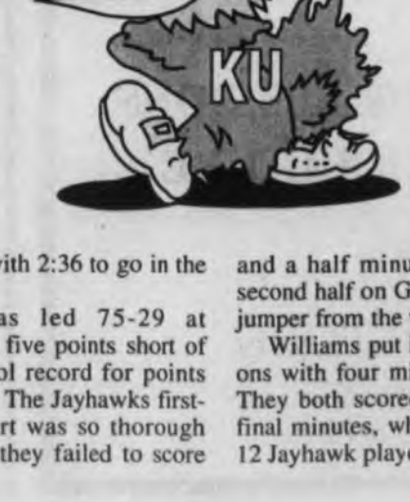
LAWRENCE, Kan. — Patrick Richey came off the bench to score 23 points, leading three Kansas reserves with career highs as the No. 4 Jayhawks destroyed Oral Roberts 140-72 Thursday night.

Kansas (13-1) won its 1,499th game, one short of joining North Carolina and Kentucky as the only schools with 1,500 victories.

The Jayhawks mauled Oral Roberts in the first half, taking leads of 48-9 and 70-20 en route to their 14th consecutive victory at home.

With reserves playing most of the way, Kansas ran up the second-highest point total and second-biggest victory margin in its 95-year history.

Oral Roberts (3-10) lost its fifth consecutive game and has lost all nine road games this season.



Joining Richey with career highs were Greg Ostertag with 21 points and Greg Gurley with 16. Seven Kansas players reached double figures, including Adonis Jordan with 17 and Rex Walters with 15.

Lenard Jones and Kenneth Bohanon led the Titans with 22 points each.

The Jayhawks rolled to a 24-4 lead in the first seven minutes, capped by Adonis Jordan's 3-pointer. Then things really got out of hand.

After Ray Thompson broke the run with two jumpers in a 14-second span, the Jayhawks scored the next 21 points — only four of them by a starter — for a 48-9 lead with 8:52 left.

Although Kansas coach Roy Williams emptied his bench midway through the half, the Jayhawks continued to add to their lead. Richey scored 13 of his points in an 8-minute stretch and hit a scoop shot for a 70-20 margin with 2:36 to go in the half.

Kansas led 75-29 at halftime, five points short of the school record for points in a half. The Jayhawks first-half effort was so thorough that had they failed to score in the second half, they still would have won by three points.

Kansas shot 66 percent in the first half, including eight of nine 3-pointers. The Titans managed only 29 percent shooting in the first half.

The Jayhawks hit the 100-point plateau six and a half minutes into the second half on Greg Gurley's jumper from the wing.

Williams put in two walk-ons with four minutes to go. They both scored during the final minutes, which gave all 12 Jayhawk players points.

▶NO. 10 OKLAHOMA BURIES CORNHUSKERS

NORMAN, Okla. (AP) — Terry Evans scored 29 points and led big runs in each half that carried No. 10 Oklahoma to a 102-89 victory over Nebraska in the Big Eight on Thursday night.

Oklahoma (12-3 overall, 1-1 Big Eight) overcame a 12-point first-half deficit to avoid losing its second straight home game. Nebraska (11-4, 0-1) made 11 3-pointers, but hurt itself by committing 28 turnovers.

The Cornhuskers took a 39-27 lead before Oklahoma outscored them 21-4 in the final 6 1/2 minutes of the first half. Evans scored nine of the points, and Nebraska helped out by committing seven turnovers.

Jeff Webster scored 19 points, and Bryatt Vann had 18 for Oklahoma. Jamar Johnson had 20 points.

▶GANT SIGNS WITH BRAVES; BAINES TO ORIOLES

ATLANTA (AP) — Outfielder Ron Gant and the Atlanta Braves agreed Thursday afternoon to a $3.7-million, one-year contract, a $1-million raise for the 27-year-old outfielder.

Gant hit .259 with 17 home runs, 80 RBIs and 32 stolen bases in 1992, when the Braves won their second straight National League pennant.

Gant had more than 30 homers and 30 stolen bases in both 1990 and 1991. He has 111 homers in just under five major league seasons.

In another move, the Baltimore Orioles sent two minor-league pitchers to the Oakland A's for Harold Baines. Baines, a lifetime .286 hitter, has averaged 19 homers and 82 RBIs over 13 major league seasons.

He was signed for $1.1 million plus incentives.

Baines was born and raised in Maryland. He batted .253 last season with the Athletics, hitting 16 dingers and driving in 76 runs in 140 games.

Baltimore gave up two class A pitchers.

Iraq expresses desire to comply with UN resolution

ASSOCIATED PRESS

UNITED NATIONS — Iraq has sent two letters to the Security Council expressing willingness to comply with U.N. resolutions and asking permission to retrieve equipment from the border area with Kuwait, diplomats said Thursday.

The United States and its allies cited Iraq's border incursions among the reasons for Wednesday's air strike in southern Iraq.

Baghdad also had banned U.N. inspectors from using their own planes to monitor the elimination of Iraq's weapons of mass destruction.

The Security Council consulted in private Thursday, and some members seemed encouraged by the Iraqi offer.

"We assume that after what happened yesterday the Iraqi authorities won't be foolish enough to endanger the safety ... of the flights," French Ambassador Jean-Bernard Merimée said.

"I think that the council left very satisfied that they have been given the kind of information they need," said U.S. Ambassador Edward Perkins.

The Security Council gathered after Iraq's U.N. ambassador, Nizar Hamdoon, met with representatives of four of the five permanent members — the United States, Britain, France and Russia. China is the other permanent member.

Hamdoon assured them of his government's compliance. He said U.N. inspection planes could begin flying over Iraq again as early as Friday.

"On the questions about the border, it eases the tensions," Hungarian Ambassador Andre Erdos said. "These (concessions) certainly are positive, and I welcome them."

The letters were signed by Iraqi Foreign Minister Muhammad Said al-Sahhaf, Erdos told the Associated Press.

The allies also had given Iraq an ultimatum to remove anti-aircraft missiles threatening allied patrols in the no-fly zone in southern Iraq.

The night raid was to destroy these missile batteries.

Air strikes accomplish fulfillment of demands

ASSOCIATED PRESS

Baghdad promised Thursday to abide by two U.N. demands that prompted U.S.-led air strikes on southern Iraq, but the key issue of Iraqi anti-aircraft missiles in no-fly zones remained unsettled.

Pentagon officials said only one of the four targeted anti-missile batteries was knocked out in Wednesday's short, intense raids. They said the other three were disassembled and temporarily unusable.

But U.S. officials said the mission was successful because a threat to allied planes enforcing the no-fly zones was curbed and a "strong message" was sent to Iraqi President Saddam Hussein to obey U.N. resolutions. They said allied jets would attack again if needed.

Iraq gave no indication it would withdraw the missiles. It said soldiers manning the anti-aircraft batteries had been ordered not to fire during Wednesday's attack, but in the future would be prepared to retaliate.

The official Iraqi News Agency reported two planes had flown over northern Iraq on Thursday, but fled after being confronted by anti-aircraft forces. There was no elaboration and the planes were not identified.

A senior Pentagon official said there was no evidence of such an incident. Speaking on condition of anonymity, he said there had been no radar illuminations, no missiles fired and no Iraqi aircraft in the no-fly zones.

Baghdad quickly backed down Thursday on two issues:

Deputy Premier Tariq Aziz said Iraq had ended a ban on U.N. flights, which had prevented weapons inspectors from dismantling Iraq's weapons of mass destruction.

Baghdad also promised to stop the raids into Kuwait to remove Iraqi material left there after Iraqi forces were routed in the 1991 Persian Gulf War.

The United States and its allies cited Iraq's border incursions among the reasons for Wednesday's air strike in southern Iraq.

More than 110 American, British and French planes raided missile batteries in the southern no-fly zone, set up in August below the 32nd parallel to protect Shiite Muslim rebels.

President Bush, who ordered the attack a week before his four-year term ends, said it had "made the skies a little safer." He called the raid "a big success."

The Pentagon said allied warplanes damaged four Iraqi air defense sites they had targeted, and destroyed one mobile missile battery. The Iraqis dismantled the three other missile batteries after the attack, though it was unclear whether they had been hit.

Pentagon spokesman Pete Williams said the main point was that the interlocking system of air defense radars, communications and missiles in southern Iraq no longer posed a threat to the allied aircraft.

Reader urged to seek counseling

DEAR CASSANDRA,

I am in a fraternity and, for obvious reasons, would wish to keep its identity unknown, for I am a homosexual. Because of my membership I feel the need to always present a masculine image.

I also have a girlfriend who is a member of the greek community. I have been seeing her for about three months, and though I like her as a person and a friend, the relationship is mostly a cover-up for my homosexuality. None of my fraternity brothers suspects that I am gay, for I have been in the closet all of my life and am used to acting like I'm straight. But this is not my only problem.

My girlfriend and I have progressed along the usual course of any normal straight relationship, and by now we have had sex more than once. I could tell from the start that she was attracted to me, and though I feel bad about what I am doing, this is the pain I must endure. I am not ready to admit my sexuality to the public.

While we are making out and doing other things to please her, I almost always imagine she is a man. And sometimes when I approach orgasm, I wish that one time she could be a he.

I don't want to attend any of the Bisexual and Gay and Lesbian Organization (BaGaLs) meetings because I would worry that my friends might somehow find out. I am emotionally distraught and would appreciate any advice you can give me.

Gay and Confused

DEAR GAY AND CONFUSED,

I urge you to seek counseling. Not because there is anything wrong with being gay, but because this is obviously a turbulent time in your life. A counselor might be able to help you sort through your confusion.

K-State offers free counseling services at Lafene Health Center. Since you are scared your friends might find out, you could go to Pawnee Mental Health Center. It offers counseling on a sliding fee schedule.

I wish you the best. Society has begun to be more accepting of homosexuals, but unfortunately, prejudice and misunderstanding still exist. Let me know how things work out.

It's enough to make you appreciate Pat Morita

If you thought that the sequel-retentive producers in Hollywood had pushed the comfort envelope with "Friday The 13th" and "A Nightmare On Elm Street," you should thank god you're not in Japan.

The 45th installment of the "Otoko Wa Tsuraiyo" series debuted to long ticket lines the day after Christmas.

Bing Crosby and Bob Hope wouldn't have had the stamina that overworked, 64-year-old actor Kiyoshi Atsumi (who plays the main character Tora-san) has displayed since the chronicle began in 1969.

The story of each film roughly follows the same storyline: Tora-san, described as "a lovable Everyman," goes on a trip, falls madly in love with a woman but ends up playing matchmaker for her instead. He comes home, then goes off on another trip and, thus, another movie.

It seems that the Japanese have stumbled upon the secret to success — don't spend any money on the film. Besides having the same actor, they keep the same sets and the same clothes. This keeps the budget hovering around the $14.60 range, which is pretty good when you consider each film brings in about $8 million a year.

While "Otoko Wa Tsuraiyo" is translated as "It's Hard Being A Man," we believe a more accurate title would be "It's Hard Being An Elderly Japanese Actor in 45 Cheapo Films."

Coming soon: 'Hamlet' starring Don Knotts

The warning has been issued that the world is in danger of "Hamlet Fatigue."

Shakespeare's tale of boy-meets-girl, boy-meets-ghost, everyone-dies-violently, is currently one of the hottest commodities in the theatrical world.

In the last five years, eight productions of the play have begun in London alone.

Perhaps, it is the nature of the role that has fueled the streak, allowing an almost infinite number of artistic interpretations to be played out.

God knows, everyone's had her or his turn.

Sir John Gielgud, Mel Gibson, Peter O'Toole, Albert Finney, Alan Rickman, Daniel Day-Lewis, and about 68 percent of high-school males have taken on the sprawling role of the brooding Danish prince. As we speak, Kenneth Branagh is packing them in at the Royal Shakespeare Company's London production, and the K-State Theatre is rarin' to give it a go.

But how many times can one watch pouting actors stomp through Elsinore, or see the well-known "to be or not to be" soliloquy "handled and pawed about by declamatory boys and men," as English essayist Charles Lamb put?

Weekend suggests that the best version of Hamlet can be seen by renting the film version of Tom Stoppard's brilliant play "Rosencrantz & Guildenstern Are Dead."

She could light the world up with her smile

In all the excitement of commemorating Martin Luther King Jr.'s birthday today, let's not overlook the birthday of someone who had a similar impact on contemporary American society — Charo.

Turning 42 is always a treacherous time, perhaps more so for this alluring entertainer. Unfortunately, these are not the lucrative late '70s/early '80s, when TV audiences demanded flamboyant, heavily-accented Spanish women trilling about nothing in particular.

The arrival of Charo was the Kennedy assassination of our generation — we all remember where we were when we first saw this saucy Spaniard grace a "Love Boat" episode.

Besides her four "Love Boat" appearances, Charo was also a welcome staple on five Bob Hope specials, two "Fantasy Island" episodes, a "Facts of Life" episode, a "Chico and the Man" episode, and the blockbuster holiday extravaganza "Perry Como's Easter in Guadalajara."

Lest you think that Charo was a mere supporting extra, we throw the year 1976 in your face. Not only did her ABC variety show, simply titled "Charo," air in May, but August saw the debut of the one-episode epic "Charo & the Sergeant." Need we say more?

Now the eerie part. During our research we stumbled onto the totally irrelevant fact that Gabe "Mr. Kotter" Kaplan captained the ABC team in the "Battle of the Network Stars" a record five times. He was eventually ousted by an obviously more athletic Dick Van Patten.

The clincher: Dick Van Patten was a guest star on "Charo & the Sergeant."

Gives you chills, doesn't it?

UNDER THE GAVEL

Getting away with it or getting put away

The hallowed halls of justice. This is a phrase that brings to mind large, pillared buildings with statues carved into their sides, black-robed judges, even "L.A. Law".

OK, maybe not. Of all images that come to mind, however, a cheaply-carpeted, orange-vinyl-covered metal chair image of a courtroom is not among the most common.

Welcome to Manhattan Municipal Court, wherein on any given Tuesday or Thursday, your fate rests in the hands of Judge Patrick Caffey.

"It's a part-time job," Caffey said of his duties as judge. "I'm a lawyer the rest of the time."

Caffey has been a judge for 10 years and has to shake his head when asked about some of his more interesting cases.

"I'm sure there have been many days when I had to restrain myself from laughing at some of the things I've heard," he said. "But you have to keep in mind that even though we don't deal with some of the more serious crimes, they are still crimes."

Municipal Court is where we go to plead for our existence when we drive under the influence of alcohol. Or when we shoplift, get in bar fights, and when we speed, among other things. Perhaps a few students have been here?

"Most of our cases are alcohol-related," Caffey said.

Imagine that.

How do you get to Municipal Court? Break a law, silly. Whether it is a traffic ticket, an arrest or citation, you will be assigned a day for arraignment.

"At the arraignment, the person is given the chance to plead guilty, no contest, or not guilty," Laurie Cammel, court services officer, said. "Lots of times things have already been taken care of, and they don't even have to come in."

"Taken care of" does not mean the person has knocked off the witnesses or the judge.

"The person has already made a deal through their lawyer," Cammel said.

If you plead not guilty, a trial date is set. If you plead guilty, you are assessed a fine or sentenced. Many sentences are suspended for probation, which is where Cammel comes in.

As court services officer, she keeps those probationers on their toes. By meeting with this heinous criminal element weekly, she is able to monitor behavior and collect weekly payment of fines.

So what is the best excuse she has ever heard for missing a probation meeting?

"Gosh, there are so many," she said. "But my favorite is 'I forgot.' At least it's honest."

One interesting note about shoplifting cases is that the fines and sentences are the same no matter what you stole. Cammel said she has seen people in the courtroom for something as small as a pair of $2 shoe laces.

"Most of the time it's not something that the person needs that he steals," she said. "If it was a matter of hunger or just not having the money, it would be more understandable."

So, all you sticky-fingered shoppers might want to make it worth your while. The minimum sentence Caffey usually gives is 30 days suspended and a $100 fine, plus court costs.

"I have given the maximum to a few people," Caffey said. "A $500 fine and six months in jail."

He said the people who come in as five- or six-time offenders will most likely get "hammered."

"In those cases, you don't have much choice," he said.

There have been a few instances of people coming to Manhattan from Geary County to shoplift. Caffey said he thinks if this is a trend, it is for a good reason.

"They put you in jail on the first offense over there," he said. "But I doubt the people who do it are really paying attention to the fines."

> "This guy was doing 40 in a 30-mile zone. He said he wasn't paying attention and didn't think his car would go that fast."
> JUDGE PATRICK CAFFEY

What is the best story Caffey has ever heard from a speeder trying to get out of a ticket?

"This guy was doing 40 in a 30-mile zone," he said. "He said he wasn't paying attention and didn't think his car would go that fast.

"My reply was that if his car wasn't able to go 30 or 40, he shouldn't be driving it."

Other reasons include "my speedometer isn't working," and "I didn't see the sign." Then there is the ever-popular "I had to go to the bathroom."

Remember, the intent does not have to be proven in speeding cases. The law has been broken, and there is no mercy.

"Very rarely does a person get out of a ticket," Caffey said.

He admitted that most officers do not give tickets for seven or eight miles an hour over the speed limit, in fact usually not less than 10. He said that people will always try to stretch it, and that is when they get into trouble.

Finally, for those of you who are unaware of fines for driving while under the influence, the minimum fine for a first offense is a 48-hour jail sentence or 100 hours community service, plus fines and court costs.

Are there any new excuses for that one, judge?

"Just when you think you've heard them all, there is always a new one."

If you like Leary's lingo, you'll love his new album

CRIS ARY
Collegian

From MTV to Sander Claus to "No Cure For Cancer," Denis Leary has emerged as a driving force in comedy.

His new album, "No Cure For Cancer," fuses Leary's known talents for straightforward, hit-'em-where-it-hurts comedy and his, until now, unknown talent for singing as well.

The album is full of the hard comedy and wild, fast- paced style that made him famous in his MTV commercials, and oh ... he still has his cigarette.

Leary opens his one-man show with a singing tribute to everyday people he titles "A—hole."

"I'm just a regular Joe with a regular job/ I'm your average white suburbanite slob/ I drive really slow in the ultrafast lane/ While people behind me are going insane."

After the song, Leary starts the stand-up comedy. His social commentaries on such topics as drugs, rehabilitation and more drugs leaves little to the imagination.

"I stopped doing illegal drugs. Now I do legal drugs. I'm on NyQuil™ and Sudafed™ right now. I took NyQuil™ three years ago and just got out of the coma right before the show," he said.

Leary also delves into his past as he examines the 1960s and drug rehabilitation.

"Back in the '60s, rehab was quitting coke and picking up a case of beer and a couple joints."

The sketches continues as Leary takes on the non-smoking delegates.

"I hate it when people give you those stupid facts about smoking, like 'You know that smoking takes ten years off your life.' Well those would be the last ten years wouldn't they? Those wheelchair, slobbering, kidney dialysis- machine years. You can have them."

"They shot JFK. They shot RFK. But they left Teddy alone, thinking he'd do a better job himself. I can't believe that they left the biggest target alone. You can't miss him. You can shoot from L.A. and hit him in Massachusetts five minutes later."

Leary concludes his album with three hilarious songs — "The Downtrodden Song," "Traditional Irish Folk Song," and "Voices in My Head," an insane look at insanity.

If you're the kind that doesn't like a lot of four-letter words, Leary might not be your man.

But if you like fast-paced, no-holds-barred comedy and an assortment of good songs, Leary's "No Cure For Cancer" will not disappoint you.

MOVIE REVIEW

Combination of older themes gives new twist to 'Sneakers'

BY THE COLLEGIAN STAFF

When you combine "Patriot Games" and "Wargames," you get a lot of games — and the new movie by Phil Alden Robinson.

With his film "Sneakers" Robinson merges the wonders of computer technology and espionage to give the viewer a dramatic, yet very humorous, tale of a little black box that could change the world.

Robert Redford heads a star-studded cast as the head of a team of experts paid by banks to enhance their security systems.

Dan Akroyd plays Redford's electronics expert who has a habit of suspecting the worst of any government agency, and Sidney Poitier plays an ex-CIA agent hired for the teams covert operations.

The film also spotlights the talents of River Phoenix as a juvenile computer expert used by the group and David Strathairn as Redford's blind computer genius with an exceptional sense of hearing and touch.

The movie centers around Redford and his group as they try to capture a black box. The box, which they believe is being acquired for the government, is the ultimate decoder. With this box, Redford finds out that he can easily break into any computer in the world.

As Redford captures the box, it falls into the hands of his old friend from the 1960s, played by Ben Kingsley. Kingsley was once arrested for tampering with computer bank files along with Redford, something from which Redford luckily escaped.

Kingsley wants to use the box to break into all the world's major computers. By doing this, he hopes to change the planet for the better.

With the help of piano teacher and ex-girlfriend, played by Mary McDonnell, Redford and company try to recapture the black box from Kingsley.

The movie, co-written and directed by Phil Alden Robinson, demonstrates the state of the art in computer technology — all of which is very reminiscent of the Matthew Broderick film "Wargames."

"Sneakers" also gives the audience the feel of modern- day espionage, with an astonishing look into surveillance techniques rivaled only by "Patriot Games."

Robinson combines young and veteran talents into a movie masterpiece for the '90s. Redford, Kingsley and Poitier give solid and humorous performances, while Akroyd, Phoenix, Strathairn and McDonnell fill the movie with enough comedy to keep audiences laughing.

"Sneakers" is a movie that anyone can enjoy, whether you have knowledge of electronics or not. The film will keep you sitting at the edge of your seat while you laugh your head off.

Makeup artists make movie magic

ASSOCIATED PRESS

LOS ANGELES — When Billy Crystal called makeup artist Peter Montagna to report a good reaction to the first screening of "Mr. Saturday Night," the comedian added apologetically: "Nobody mentioned the makeup."

"Great!," Montagna, who aged Crystal for the film, said. "That's the best news I could hear."

Michelle Burke, who won an Academy Award for makeup in "Quest for Fire," said she agrees.

"No compliment about the makeup is good news. Part of the job is to call no attention to our work," she said.

Making Crystal, Gary Oldman ("Bram Stoker's Dracula"), Bette Midler and James Caan ("For the Boys"), Michael Douglas and Melanie Griffith ("Shining Through") and other stars look aged is the often unrewarded task of the film world's makeup artists.

Once limited to applying pancake makeup and lip gloss to the world's most famous faces, many are now technicians using sophisticated means to work their magic.

Greg Cannom, Oscar-nominated for aging Maggie Smith in "Hook," was charged by director Francis Coppola to create facial transformations for Gary Oldman as star of "Bram Stoker's Dracula." Part of the makeup depicted Dracula as a monster, part as an old man. How old?

"Four hundred years," Cannom said, "but we decided on a 75-80 look."

Like other makeup artists, Cannom began with a plaster face cast, from which he sculpted the aged look. He devised 14 "appliances," pieces of foam latex, that were laid on Oldman's face in a process taking up to four hours.

"I tried to give Gary a parchment look," Cannom said.

Crystal arrived each morning and spent his first four or five hours in makeup. After 10 or 12 hours directing and acting in the film each day, he underwent the painful ordeal of having the latex taken off with makeup remover.

Montagna recalls when he transformed Crystal into a crusty old-timer for Rob Reiner's "The Princess Bride."

"Billy was not as well known in England then," Montagna said.

"He arrived at 4 in the morning to be made up, then appeared on the set at 8 and worked all day. When he came on the set at the end of the picture to thank the crew, they didn't know who he was."

Film shines despite struggle in theaters

ASSOCIATED PRESS

It's too bad the adaptation of E.M. Forster's first novel was released to theaters, where it had to compete with the ponderous pageantry of the Merchant-Ivory productions of Forster works.

Had it been made for television, "Where Angels Fear to Tread" would have been received as a minor gem. As it was, it faded quickly from the box office last year in the hoopla for Merchant-Ivory's excellent "Howards End."

Fans of the Merchant-Ivory franchise, as well as those who've never succumbed, should find a good deal to appreciate in "Angels," an occasionally funny, finally tragic tale of British upper-class xenophobia directed by "Brideshead Revisited" veteran Charles Sturridge.

As it opens, the newly widowed Lilia Herriton, after 12 years imprisoned with her husband's family, is off to recuperate in Italy. Before long, she writes home with the news that she is remarrying. It's bad enough that he's Italian — he's also 21, and a dentist's son.

The marriage is rocky. She wants to see people; he wants to keep her cooped up at home, away from public view.

News of the baby sets off a tizzy back in England. Lilia's friend Caroline suggests she bring up the boy; the Herritons — Lilia's harridan of a mother-in-law, stiff-necked sister-in-law Harriet and malleable brother-in-law Philip — think the baby belongs with them.

VIDEO RELEASE

■ "Where Angels Fear to Tread" is available on New Line Home Video and is rated PG.

Caroline, Harriet and Philip travel to Italy. There, Caroline and Philip are forced to re-examine their prejudices.

"Do you want the child to stop with his father, who loves him but will bring him up badly, or do you want him to come to Salston where no one loves him but he'll be brought up well?" Caroline asks him.

Philip is too weak yet to make the choice. He believes life is passing him by, though he longs to "collide" with it. He loves the Italians and what he sees as their refusal to get too worked up about the course of events.

Harriet, on the other hand, seethes with contempt for foreigners. "I don't care for the lot of you. I'm English," she tells one.

Her bigotry leads her to an act of recklessness than brings all of them into violent collision with life and leaves Philip and Caroline to mourn together on a cold English train platform.

Letterman takes 'Late Night' to CBS

"We'll stay here (in New York) if we can find reasonable parking rates."

DAVID LETTERMAN

ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — David Letterman told his "Late Night" audience Thursday he'll be taking his "Stupid Pet Tricks" and Top 10 lists from NBC to CBS.

Letterman said his last show on NBC will be June 25.

Letterman didn't give details of the move. CBS was expected to announce later Thursday that it had signed Letterman for an 11:30 p.m. talk show, smack against his old friend Jay Leno and NBC's "The Tonight Show."

Not immediately known was how NBC planned to fill Letterman's 12:30 a.m. slot. The 11-year-old show had helped NBC dominate late-night television.

Letterman, during the afternoon taping of his show, tipped his hand by starting with a joke about how he would be visiting outgoing President Bush to pick up any extra moving boxes. Then Letterman referred to lines in the NBC building lobby for "Late Night" ticketholders and said there would be an additional line "if you would like to host the show."

Letterman then announced his last show on NBC would be June 25. The audience groaned, and he said, "Do you really mean that, ladies and gentlemen?

"Shortly thereafter we'll be taking this program to another network — can I mention this? — taking it over there to CBS," he said.

Letterman's first guests Thursday were movie critics Gene Siskel and Roger Ebert, and Siskel asked if the show would stay in New York.

"We'll stay here if we can find reasonable hourly parking rates," Letterman replied.

The irascible talk-show host's decision to leave NBC was fueled by public dissatisfaction with his bosses, who had passed him over as successor to Johnny Carson, and a fervent courtship by CBS.

CBS was believed to have offered him $14 to $16 million a year, a hefty raise from the $7 million annually he earned at NBC.

Letterman will enter gab-show gridlock, competing against Leno, the syndicated "Arsenio Hall Show" and a new Fox show with comedian Chevy Chase, among others.

Letterman's departure had been in the cards, some say, as early as 1988, after Leno was named "permanent guest host" to fill the gaps of Carson's laid-back "Tonight" taping schedule.

Although Letterman signed a new contract in 1990, he was piqued when NBC sold "Late Night" reruns to cable's Arts & Entertainment network without consulting or compensating him.

And though he may never have expressly indicated his interest in the "Tonight" show, his feelings were hurt when NBC picked Leno for the job in June 1991 and allowed Letterman to learn about it from the media.

That's when he retained Hollywood "superagent" Mike Ovitz's high-powered Creative Artists Agency to negotiate with NBC, where his contract expires in late June.

When contract renewal talks opened in September, NBC let the comedian "explore opportunities outside of the network."

In late '91, news reports said ABC and NBC were battling for Letterman's services. Spy magazine, a gossipy monthly, reported the deal was done: Letterman would move to Los Angeles and follow "Nightline."

In mid-1992, Advertising Age said ABC wanted to offer Letterman the 11:30 slot and move "Nightline" anchor Ted Koppel to Sunday morning, where he likely would succeed David Brinkley.

Ad Age said even Fox Broadcasting Co. was interested in Letterman despite having signed Chase to a late-night show for fall 1993.

As 1993 drew near, one trial balloon had NBC keeping Leno at 11:30 and giving Letterman a one-hour show every night — at 10 p.m.

The stories may have varied so widely because they were at least partially true. On Tuesday, CBS Broadcast Group president Howard Stringer told television critics that at one point eight companies, including Disney and Viacom, were vying with CBS for Letterman.

Stringer said he started courting Letterman's producers 1 1/2 years ago, making friends with Robert Morton and Peter Lassally.

Stringer said he met Letterman at a CBS News softball game and encountered him again at a Peabody awards ceremony after the gap-toothed host, in accepting an award for "Late Night," joked: "Is Howard Stringer in the house?"

"I shouted 'Yes!' and dashed around and caught him," Stringer said. He recalled telling Letterman: "There's a home for you at CBS."

CBS had long been hungry for a position in late-night television.

"They came after Leno three years ago," one NBC executive said. "One way or another, when these guys' contracts came up, there was going to be an auction."

Now, questions abound.

Can "The Tonight Show," NBC's formidable franchise, handle perhaps its strongest competition ever?

And will Letterman's brand of comedy, variety and wiseguy interviews, play at 11:30? Apart from some unmemorable "Tonight" guest-host appearances, he is untested in the time slot, and skeptics note his irreverence might not click with viewers who are older and likelier to fall asleep by the second commercial. CBS' local news programs also might not be as strong a lead-in as "Tonight."

These are problems CBS is thrilled to have a chance to worry about.

Country music finds success on television here and abroad

ASSOCIATED PRESS

NASHVILLE, Tenn. — Country music, long a mainstay on radio, is surging on network television as well, with Garth Brooks and Billy Ray Cyrus leading the way.

There were five country music specials on network television in 1992 and three more will be aired early this year.

Programs showcasing "the Nashville Sound" are commanding strong ratings and drawing solid support from advertisers.

"Country music has become an important part of the entertainment world and part of the social fabric, and TV has jumped on it," said Ed Benson, executive director of the Country Music Association.

Brooks had his own highly rated special on NBC last January and also appeared on ABC's "Best of Country '92" on Dec. 10. Cyrus was on "Best of Country '92," and his own ABC special is scheduled to be broadcast in February. He's under contract for two more, thanks to the popularity of his single "Achy Breaky Heart" and his album "Some Gave All."

"With these exciting young artists, they have brought visual imagery to the music," Benson said. "They have attracted a younger and broader audience."

"A Country Music Celebration," a two-hour special marking the 35th anniversary of the CMA, will air on CBS in the first quarter of this year. Vince Gill, Wynonna Judd and Kenny Rogers are among those scheduled to appear on the show.

Another CBS special, "Women of Country," has been taped for broadcast in early 1993. It features Judd, Mary-Chapin Carpenter, Emmylou Harris, Kathy Mattea, Trisha Yearwood and others.

"Country music is capitalizing on things sociologically," Benson said. "There's a return of fundamental values in America. The product is right for the times."

The CMA's annual awards show in September, which included live performances by both Brooks and Cyrus, was the third highest rated program of the week. The two-hour show was seen by 48 million viewers.

"They turned away advertisers for the show," Benson said.

In May, CBS broadcast the special "Country Music Hall of Fame 25," featuring about 50 country performers saluting the silver anniversary of the Nashville shrine.

Also last spring, the Academy of Country Music awards show was broadcast on NBC.

One ratings failure was NBC's "Hot Country Nights" in early 1992, which was not renewed after 12 weeks. It did better than previous NBC shows in that time spot, but still finished in the bottom third of the weekly rankings.

"The time slot (early Sunday night) was one of the worst of the week," Benson said. "It was against 'Murder, She Wrote,' which tied up the older demographic, and Fox Network had a good lineup targeting the younger audience."

Country music got a global boost in October when the cable channel Country Music Television began a European cable network. Both the American and European channels broadcast country music videos.

Also on cable, "Hats Off to Minnie: America Honors Minnie Pearl" in October drew some of the strongest ratings ever on cable's The Nashville Network. One hundred celebrities participated in the 2 1/2-hour special honoring the 80-year-old Grand Ole Opry humorist.

Air travelers affected most by snowstorm

JENNIFER SWANSON

Although some students did experience travel delays due to the recent snow falls, snow didn't pose a problem for most people.

Gary Weed, senior in psychology, said he experienced delays in his Sunday flight from California to Kansas City International Airport.

"We circled KCI for about two and a half hours because the runways were too bad for us to land on. We got an extra movie, so it wasn't so bad," Weed said. "We decided to come on to Manhattan on Sunday night, but the roads weren't that bad."

Other students were delayed because of cancelled flights.

Bill Butler, senior in finance, was scheduled to fly into Kansas City from London on Sunday, but did not make it until Monday.

"When I got to Chicago, all of the flights to Kansas City had been canceled, so they routed me through Nashville," Butler said. "By the time I got to Nashville, I'd missed my flight to Kansas City and had to spend the night in Nashville."

Despite heavy snow throughout the state, the registrar's office only had to hold about 150 schedules for students who could not make it back in time to pay their fees, University Registrar Don Foster said.

Although some rumors began to circulate about the start of classes being postponed, Foster said it would take a more serious storm for that to happen.

"In the 27 years that I have been at K-State, we have only postponed classes once. Enrollment was canceled in 1979 due to a heavy snow storm," Foster said.

The last time Manhattan had a comparable snowfall was in 1983 when 10.9 inches fell in a similar time period, Mary Knapp, acting state climatologist with the Weather Data Library, said.

This week's snowfall may not have caused problems for students,

Elesa Cross, sophomore in pre-medicine, closes her eyes to keep spraying snow out of them while being pulled behind a pickup in the Bramlage Coliseum parking lot midnight Monday.

Message sent to Iraq not clear, analysts say

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — The hit-and-miss allied bombing raids sent a garbled message at best to Iraqi President Saddam Hussein, some independent military analysts said Thursday.

"With 100 aircraft sent on the mission with no opposition, we'd at best have to give them a D-plus grade," said retired Adm. Gene La Rocque, director of the Center for Defense Information, a frequent critic of U.S. military policies.

U.S. officials said they considered the mission a success, even if some Iraqi anti-aircraft missile batteries escaped, because the central goal was to silence the missile threat — either by destroying them or making Iraq move them. When the missiles are on the move they cannot be used against aircraft.

Pete Williams, the Pentagon spokesman, said that besides shutting down the air defenses, President Bush wanted to send Iraq a clear signal that it must abide by the U.N. resolutions that brought the Persian Gulf War to an end.

"If this was done to send a message, it clearly was a garbled message we sent," La Rocque said.

Peter Rodman, a former National Security Council staff member, said however successful Wednesday's mission may have been, it was too limited to dissuade Saddam.

"This retaliation was a chance to inflict real pain," he said. "We should have inflicted real pain that was more than Saddam Hussein expected. I'm afraid we did less than he expected, and it's not likely to discourage him from doing something again."

Williams said that of the allied bombs that missed their targets one hit some kind of structure that was not supposed to have been bombed. He said he did not know what kind of structure it was or whether any civilians were in or near it.

However, The Washington Post, quoting unidentified Air Force sources, reported in Friday editions that a stray 2,000-pound bomb did heavy damage to an apartment building near Basra. The newspaper said Pentagon officials gave no explanation and no casualty estimate for the bombing.

The Pentagon disclosed that one of the four anti-aircraft missile batteries it targeted in southern Iraq was destroyed while three others may well have escaped the barrage of sophisticated bombs dropped by U.S. and allied planes. The three were disassembled and as a result were temporarily unusable, it said.

Also, all four of the air defense command centers targeted in southern Iraq were damaged, a senior defense official said. The official, speaking on condition he not be identified, said two of the command centers sustained severe damage, one was hurt moderately and one lightly.

The main point, Williams said, was that the interlocking system of air defense radars, communications and missiles in southern Iraq no longer posed a threat to the allied aircraft patrolling the "no-fly zone" south of the 32nd parallel.

"If you're trying to knock communications out between Dodge City and the next town down the Pony Express trail, you don't have to saw down every telegraph pole, you just have to cut the wire once," Williams told reporters at the Pentagon. "The Iraqi southern air defense network is now seriously degraded."

Some analysts said the warplanes nonetheless could have been expected to do more damage.

Allies bomb Iraq in showdown with Saddam

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — American-led warplanes thundered into Iraq in daylight bombing raids Monday as President Bush devoted his final hours in office to a tense showdown with Saddam Hussein that strained the solidarity of the Gulf War coalition.

"Let's just hope that the message has been delivered loud and clear," Bush said, hours after Allied planes rained bombs on air-defense missile sites in southern Iraq and hit other targets in the north in limited strikes.

"We did the right thing," he said.

President-elect Clinton expressed support for Bush's action but there was pointed criticism from Arab nations that once supported military action against Iraq.

The Cairo-based Arab League called on the United Nations "to adopt a policy of self-restraint and use the language of dialogue." The Russian government delivered a note to the State Department admonishing the Bush administration not to act militarily without the explicit approval of the U.N. Security Council.

The message, from Foreign Minister Andrei V. Kozyrev, said, "There are casualties among civilian populations which is especially regrettable."

The Pentagon acknowledged that a cruise missile fired from a Navy ship Sunday had struck a Baghdad hotel. Iraq said two civilians were killed. The Pentagon said the missile was knocked off course by Iraqi fire.

A senior official, speaking on condition of anonymity, said the hotel, home to many American and other visiting journalists, was not a target. The hotel, he said, was "adjacent to the flight path" of the missile.

"These attacks could proceed without further warning," Pentagon spokesman Pete Williams said. Officials said all allied planes returned safely. Iraq said 21 people were killed altogether.

Monday's raid was the second in 24 hours and the latest in a string of allied blows that began with a bombing run on southern Iraq last Wednesday.

Clinton, two days from taking power, said the United States will not waver from demands that Saddam bow to terms of Gulf War cease-fire resolutions adopted by the United Nations two years ago.

Iraq has challenged no-fly zones imposed by the allies in the north and south and has restricted U.N. weapons inspectors.

Appearing to back away from their wartime alliance with the West, Arab nations questioned why

Walk, vigil kicks off week

NICOLLE FOLSOM
Collegian

The memorial walk and candlelight vigil that traditionally begins Martin Luther King Jr. Observance Week expanded this year.

The walk, which began at 6 p.m., Monday in front of Waters Hall and ended at All Faiths Chapel, is usually campus oriented.

Recently it has been broadened to include combined efforts between campus and community planning committees, Mary Nichols, chairperson of the Intergovernmental Task Force, said.

Nichols said the committee wanted to ensure total community participation by combining as many activities as possible that would encourage multi-generational attendance.

"It's all of the generations coming together and living the dream that's important," Nichols said. "We are all together and enjoy being together."

One hundred and thirty students, faculty and community members participated in the activities.

Several speakers paid tribute to King during the evening vigil.

"Dr. King's work not only helped blacks, not only helped whites, it helped everybody," Rep. Shelia Hochhauser, D-Manhattan, said.

Alpha Phi Alpha Fraternity sponsored the event, which has occurred annually since 1986.

"It's a good way to remind society of the dream he fought so hard for," said Jayson Strickland, senior in elementary education and Alpha president. "He has contributed to society and was an Alpha."

The activities are a great service to young people who did not have an opportunity to see King while he was alive, said Diana Caldwell, co-chairperson of the King Observance Week.

"By having the celebration, we are renewing the attributions Dr. King had regarding this vision that America can be America some day," Caldwell said.

Events honoring King will continue throughout the week.

"We encourage all people to celebrate this great man," said Veryl Switzer, co-chairperson of the week's activities.

Health care has been a hot issue lately, but Kansas Representative Sheila Hochhauser has always been involved in health-care matters.

Hochhauser, D-Manhattan, has a master's degree in health services administration and worked in the health-care field for five years before becoming an attorney.

She says health-care reform will be a big topic in this session of the Kansas Legislature. Community rating is one subject up for discussion.

"Small employers that might employ four people," Hochhauser said. "One person might have a difficult pregnancy or an illness. They might get treated for a year and then get better.

"The following year, the health-care premiums go up 300 percent. Premiums go up for the entire firm, and then there are five people uninsured."

"It's ridiculous. They can't spread the risk, so they have to spread the cost across the group," she said.

Hochhauser said 25 percent of Kansans don't have health insurance. The new plan would judge how much premiums rise by the number of people who have illnesses across the state of Kansas in a year. The cost would be spread across the state instead of a few people in business.

"I also think one of the things coming up will be something to help health-care costs," Hochhauser said. "One way is a uniform health insurance form."

THE ISSUES THIS SESSION

▶ Welfare

The Department of Social and Rehabilitation Services will need an addition of $64 million to its $1.1 billion annual budget to break even next year.

Ways to cut costs include limiting payments to nursing homes and hospitals and dropping programs not required by federal law. Some programs in jeopardy include those designed for the mentally ill and elderly. Another proposal would impose a tax on all medical services that Kansans use.

Broadcaster, legend Dev Nelson leaves behind rich history

STEVEN ROCK
Collegian

K-State lost a legend this weekend when Dev Nelson, former Wildcat broadcaster and athletic director, died Saturday at the home of his daughter, Jana Lee Isaacson, in Shawnee. He was 66.

Nelson, who suffered a heart attack on Oct. 25 and then had a massive stroke only 10 hours later, died of complications resulting from his condition, Isaacson said.

DEV NELSON

"He was just so proud of the people and history of K-State," she said. "Whether it was a good year or a bad year, he loved this University.

"He was such a gentle, good man. When I think about my dad, I think about camping, hiking, fishing — he really loved the outdoors, and I don't think a lot of people realized that."

And to members of the University, Nelson, who was the "Voice of the Wildcats" from 1954 to 1979, will always be remembered as a man who bled purple.

"He was a true K-Stater," Associate Athletic Director Veryl Switzer, who has been with K-State since 1969, said. "We had a high regard for him as an individual, and he will be sorely missed."

A memorial service for Nelson will be at 2 p.m. Wednesday at the Edwards-Yorgensen-Meloan funeral home in Manhattan.

Farrell expansion closer to reality

SHANNON WILSON
Collegian

In November 1991, students passed a referendum to give $5 million to the Farrell Library expansion. Since that time, the architects and library administration have been working on making the expansion a reality.

"The architects have created the footprints," Brice Hobrock, dean of libraries, said. Architects for the projects are Brent Bowman and Associates of Manhattan. The associate architects are Hammond, Bebbe and Babka in Chicago.

The plans have been presented to the Joint Committee on Building Construction in the Kansas Legislature and Student Senate, he said. The committee has approved where the expansion will sit, Hobrock said.

"It's going to wrap on the west, south and east sides of the current library with the majority of the new building on the east side," Hobrock said. "It is expected to displace the art building."

Progress has been satisfactory, although the project is not as far along as footprints of other buildings approved at the same time, Hobrock said.

"It is a much larger and complex project," he said.

Ray Kowalczewski, senior in political science and economics and member of the Library Construction Review Committee, said he agrees that the complexity of the expansion has been a major stumbling block.

"One of the major impediments is that we're not able to do anything with the 1955 stacks," Kowalczewski said. "It would cost too much to demolish and rebuild them." The architects have to design around them, he said.

Despite design problems, the architects have managed to present both the footprints and a preliminary exterior design, Hobrock said.

The architects are currently working on the interior design, Hobrock said. The expansion will increase not only the space available for current library materials, but it will also increase library services, Hobrock said.

Two things the expansion will include are a science library and a 24-hour study facility for students, Hobrock said.

In addition to the study area, Kowalczewski said there was one other thing students wanted to see in a new library.

"We're probably going to have vending machines and a place where students can have food in the library," Kowalczewski said. "Those are two of the main things students have wanted."

Once the interior design is finished, which is expected to be in mid-February, the plans will again be presented to the Kansas Legislature for approval, Hobrock said.

"It will probably be a year from now before a contractor will be chosen," he said.

Missouri, Emporia win debate tourney

K-State's central location best for school participation

BREN WORKMAN
Collegian

Top teams from around the country competed in the K-State Spring 1993 Debate Tournament during the three-day weekend.

South West Missouri State University won the tournament in the junior division, with Emporia State University in second.

In the senior division, Emporia State University took first and Florida State University came in second.

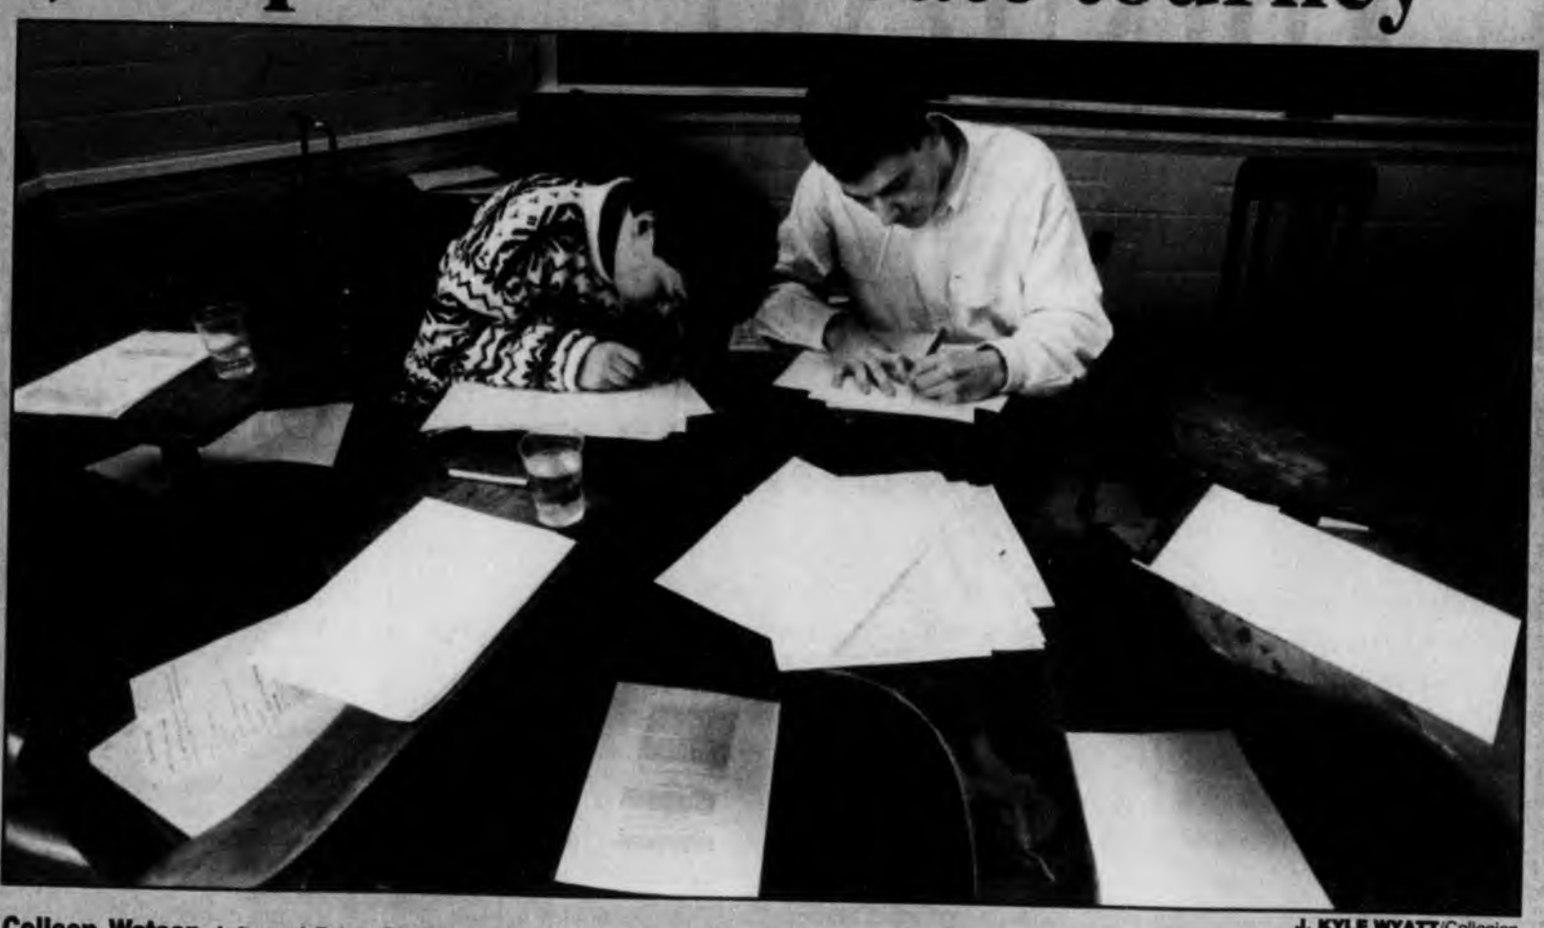
"K-State debated teams in the junior division so that they could gain experience," Susan Stanfield, K-State debate coach, said. "We didn't debate in the open division so that the students could help run the tournament."

She said schools that have a tournament usually don't debate. Rather, the students assist with judging and organizing the tournament.

The last time K-State had a spring tournament was in 1987.

"I was very glad to see K-State host a tournament again," said Eric Krug, University of North Dakota debate coach. "I was a college debater at the 1987 tournament held at K-State, and its central location allows the competition to be the best in the country due to the attendance of many schools."

In the two divisions, 22 schools were present from across the country.



"The quality of the schools in the region is excellent," Krug said. "I hope to see this tournament continue here at K-State."

David Filippi, assistant K-State debate coach, said the tournament ran very smoothly.

He also said the rounds were very competitive, and the schools were well represented.

Brandon Thompson, University of North Dakota junior division debater, said the tournament was run well, and the teams were paired against each other in good tournament organization style.

"The competition has been very good," Thompson said. "We advanced to the finals, but the competition at this tournament was rough going."

NAACP calls on police chief to resign

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WICHITA — The local chapter of the NAACP urged Police Chief Rick Stone to resign, saying the department was no longer effective since authorities began investigating Stone's conduct in office.

James Crump, president of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People chapter, said Sunday the organization did not mean to imply Stone was guilty of the accusations.

But he said the allegations have diminished the public's faith in its police department and hurt officers' morale.

The five allegations Crump referred to are charges that Stone kicked the corpses of two men involved in shoot-outs with police last year, complaints of sexual harassment filed against Stone by police department employees in 1991, and two other allegations Crump said he is personally investigating.

He said one case involved the dismissal of a black officer. The other case concerned a woman who said she was mistreated by police and physically removed from Stone's office while pursuing a complaint.

Teen dies in fire after handing out two nieces

ASSOCIATED PRESS

LAWRENCE — An apartment fire that killed a teen-ager after she heroically saved her two young nieces was being investigated as a possible arson, authorities said Monday.

"We feel very strongly it was an arson fire," said Fire Marshal Rich Barr, coordinator of the Douglas County Fire Investigation Squad.

He would not elaborate on the exact cause of the early Sunday fire that killed LaTonya Farmer, 17. No suspects had been arrested Monday afternoon, and no motive had been established, he said.

But Barr said the fire was set intentionally in a vacant apartment on the east side of the first floor. The victims were in an apartment on the second floor west side.

The Kansas Bureau of Investigation will conduct tests on materials recovered at the scene to determine how the fire began, Barr said.

Farmer passed her two nieces out of a window to neighbors on the ground before firefighters arrived, officials said. She then collapsed and died from smoke inhalation, officials said.

The nieces, ages 2 and 4, were treated at a hospital and released, officials said.

A neighbor who helped save the girls, John Burroughs, 28, was treated for smoke inhalation and released Sunday.

More than 20 firefighters battled the blaze in the four-plex apartment complex in south-central Lawrence and had it under control within 15 minutes.

Three of the apartments were unoccupied at the time of the blaze. And fire investigators said flames never reached the apartment where Farmer and five others were trapped.

Fire Chief Jim McSwain said heavy smoke filled the apartment after someone apparently tried to flee and left the door open.

IN OUR OPINION

By the Collegian Editorial Board

Nelson deserves remembrance

WE SUGGEST

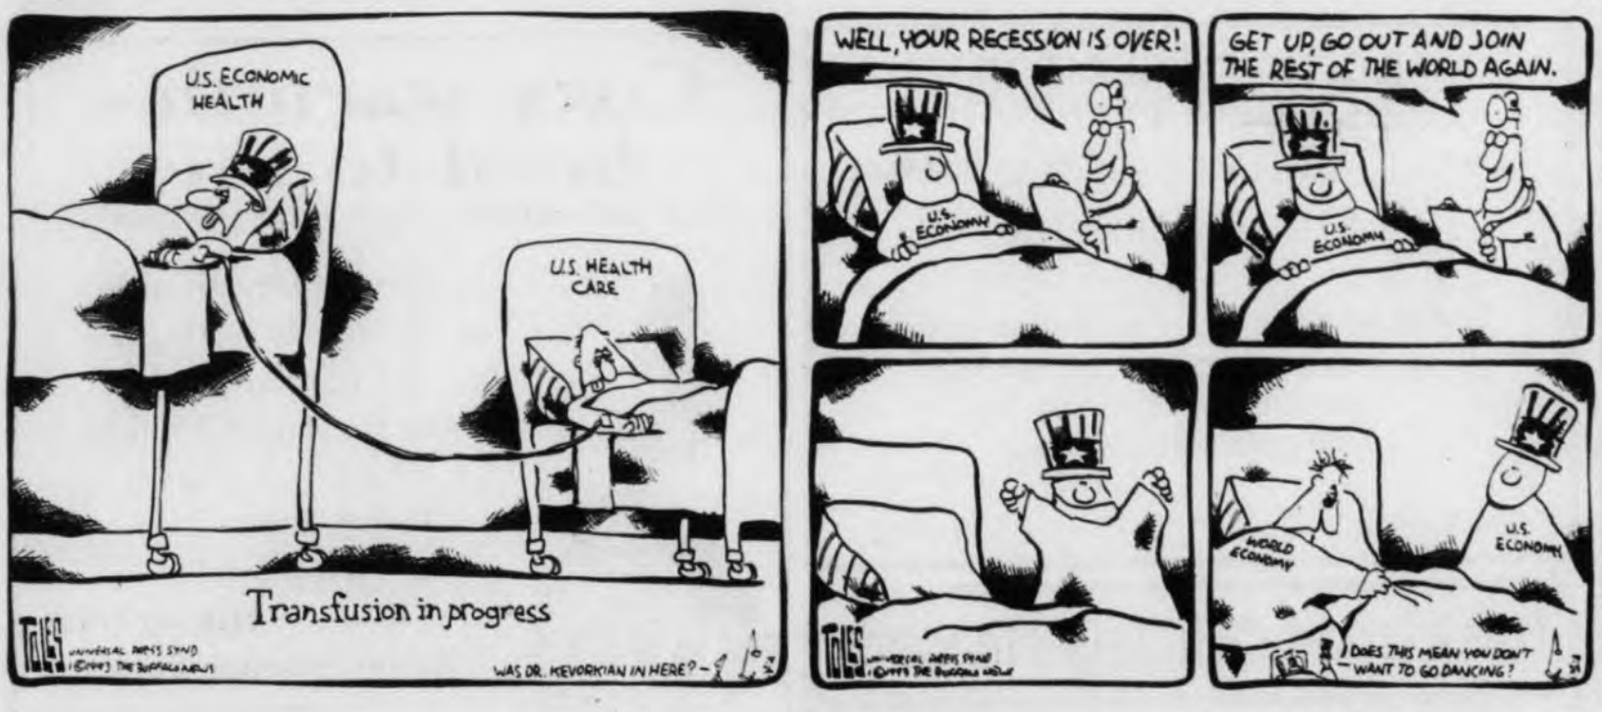
The press box at KSU Stadium should be dedicated to the memory of late sports broadcaster Dev Nelson.

With the loss of alumnus and radio sports announcer Dev Nelson last week, K-State is a little less rich in tangible heritage but perhaps all the more wealthy with memories.

From his very first K-State game broadcast in 1951 — a 65-61 Wildcat basketball win over Kansas — to his 1966-72 stint as KSU sports information director, to his retirement in 1988, Nelson held a variety of positions, most of which kept him close to the institution that he loved and that loved him.

The "Voice of the Wildcats," they tagged him, and rightly so. His was a vocal bookmark, the spot on the radio frequency dial that listeners could find blindfolded. When a game's fervor hit its peak, Nelson would describe it with his patented "rip-snortin', hootenang, double-barreled, deep-dish dilly." Few knew what it meant, but it sounded fine.

Apart from the accolades he received in Manhattan, Nelson was a respected professional throughout the Sunflower State. After a quarter of a century of sports work, Nelson was voted by his peers as the Kansas Sportscaster of the Year — five times.



And in 1988, then-Gov. Mike Hayden made Nelson a trustee for the Kansas All-Sports Hall of Fame.

After his retirement, Nelson didn't buy a condo in southern Florida but rather opted to stay in Manhattan, where he opened Dev's Dugout, a sports memorabilia store.

To the majority of people reading this, Dev Nelson is only historical matter. Few current students have ever heard him call a K-State game, have ever heard what all the fuss is about. With the legacy that Nelson left, that shouldn't matter.

The almost symbiotic relationship between K-State and Dev Nelson deserves to be commemorated and what better location than a KSU sports field? Dedicating the press box at KSU Stadium, currently under construction, is the perfect tribute to an individual who immortalized K-State athletic events with his unique enthusiasm.

Racism fought on wrong plane

JOHN HART

Today, a dark cloud of confusion surrounds the issue of racism, engulfing Martin Luther King Jr.'s dream. Something is desperately wrong with America's approach to racism. We are paying too much attention to side issues and quick fixes and are, in the process, losing focus on the core problem.

The Tomahawk Chop issue is perhaps the quintessential example of our society blowing a peripheral racial issue out of proportion. Native Americans have a legitimate complaint about the chop, but the energy expended in debating the chop would have been put to much better use by discussing the deeper and more relevant aspects of racism.

The recent National Commission on AIDS report, which declared that AIDS is now a racial issue, also illustrates how out of focus our approach to racism has become. The report stated that black and Hispanic people make up 46 percent of all U.S. cases and claimed that "As a nation we have no choice but to take account of race if we are to alter the course of the epidemic."

AIDS is a behavioral, not racial, issue. In almost all cases, AIDS is spread through sexual contact or intravenous drug use. Skin color is an irrelevant variable that we should overlook. Yet, when it comes to AIDS, the national commission wants us to believe that skin color matters. Turning AIDS into a racial issue takes the focus off the root problem of both AIDS and racism. Linking the two issues only result in more confusion.

Racism is a moral issue. The core problem of racism resides in the human heart. Unfortunately, racism is rarely confronted at its true source. Affirmative action laws attempt to confront racist behavior, multiculturalists try to make people tolerant through the right education, the politically-correct crowd provide us with right terminology and, of course, the government can solve any problem if it throws enough money at it.

All of these methods are quick fixes, but in our microwave-dinner society, a 10-step program for a racial harmony simply won't work. With affirmative action laws, government can sometimes regulate racist behavior, but not the motives in a person's heart. Multiculturalists believe that knowledge about cultural differences will make people more tolerant. Yet, history tells us that multiracial societies are unstable, as with the Croats and Serbs, and highlighting our differences instead of our similarities may lead to a more fractured society. Moral problems cannot be solved through legislation, or even education, but through a direct incursion into the soul.

Jesus Christ confronted the core problem of racism when he declared, "Love your neighbor as yourself." Love in this sense is not erotic or sentimental but as King explained, "It is the overflowing love that seeks nothing in return." Paul and Peter, apostles of Christ followed that command with instructions to "live in harmony with one another."

Serious, lasting change involves a transformation of the heart. No amount of education or affirmative action laws can accomplish that. Only when love is first pursued can other methods have any positive effects. Otherwise they act as Band-aids or cause even more strife.

King took the Christian doctrine of love and built much of his philosophy around it. His philosophy brought progress in the sixties and if applied today, meaningful change and progress would surely follow. As he has stated, "Love is mankind's most potent weapon for personal and social transformation."

Anatomy of a wounded pachyderm

ED SKOOG

Because I'm looking at a map of Houston.

The Astrodome is a red dot in quadrant U-11, just south of the Rice University football stadium. A pink rash, the Astrocomplex parking lot, leaks into quadrants U-12 and V-10. It is wider and at times more heavily guarded than Tiananmen Square.

Times such as last August's Republican National Convention.

A police sergeant at Murworth Gate, the Astrodome's eastern approach, said I could get my press credentials in a certain room in the Astrodome.

He also said no one was allowed inside the Astrodome without proper press credentials.

I stood there, thunderstruck by logic, as the sergeant waved a long white limousine through Murworth Gate. It was Connie Chung's. Ms. Chung was alone in the very back seat. I could see, through the limo's smoky glass, press credentials hung elegantly around her neck.

I waited there for hours, coastal Texas heat and smog leeching any sympathy for mankind out of me, waiting for a Republican called Chad to trot out my credentials. He never showed.

On the other side of Murworth Gate, beautiful college Republican boys and girls lounged in golf carts. As delegates arrived, shining in the Houston heat like lottery winners, they were ferried across the parking lot by these chatty young versions of themselves straight into the Astrodome, the temporary heart of the world.

Inside, GOP interior decorating squads had recombobulated the home of the Astros into a TV-friendly rock arena/moose lodge.

Bob Dole was giving free prostate examinations in the Astropavillion.

A team of prostate cancer specialists tested all comers, paid for by the Kansas senator.

His concern is well-placed. The prostate difficulty crowd is the backbone of the Republican Party. It's a badge of honor, the respectable progression of a life filled with money, leisure, mistresses and single-malt scotch whiskey.

During the Clinton administration, youthful sicknesses will replace prostate problems as a measure of clout. Tennis elbow, clinical depression and STDs I prophesy to become perfectly good excuses for declining a Georgetown dinner invitation.

Other things will be changing. Long-serving military officers will not be summarily ejected from the service by virtue of homosexuality. Austerity measures will accompany a failed attempt to reduce the deficit. Abortion bans will be lifted. Industry will be forced to curtail activities that unduly damage the environment.

In short, a Republican will be elected president in 1996.

Architecture was a hot topic in Houston. Convention chairman Rich Bond said the Republican Party was a BIG TENT with room for all Americans inside, inclusive like a fireworks stand, instead of exclusive, like a country club.

This message met with confusion from some Republicans, who thought it was a country club.

A political party is a gang loosely connected by shared notions on how to govern a country. If the Republican Party hankers to include more Americans, i.e. raise membership and garner enough votes to regain power, the tent poles and canvas of Republicanism must expand accordingly (accordionly).

Another BIG TENT analogy. Think of it as the Moonwalk at the county fair, the coolness of inflated plastic under your shoeless feet as you jumped.

The Republican National Convention and its platform seemed designed to insult and bully Americans into voting Republican, to pop the Moonwalk and tell people, "Go away. It's not yours."

But it is mine. It's the party of greatest potential, the more coherent philosophy for how to govern America in the long term, the beginning of a century, the rest of my life, a thing that worries me.

The party is haunted by ghosts.

Gen. Douglas MacArthur defying President Eisenhower, trying to start war with China and then being cheered in an N.Y.C. tickertape parade. This convention was such a parade.

Ghosts. Hatred of gays and single women raced through the conventioneers like a red electrical current. Hatred is a recurring ghost. There are other ghosts. Greed. Reagan's second term. Pride.

Good ghosts too. Detente. Reagan's first term. Lincoln. Reconstruction.

I voted for (secret ballot). Because I remembered Houston.

SCIENCE

Visiting professor to discuss influences

WENDY BARRETT
Collegian

Daniel Kleppner, professor of physics from the Massachusetts Institute of Technology will speak at 4 p.m. today in Cardwell 102.

He will discuss his views on scientific and human values and the ways they relate to everyday life during a speech titled "Coping in an Age of Anxiety; Science and the Human Condition."

On the college level, a basic understanding of science and research is important, Kleppner said. He has helped promote federal funding of science as chairman of the American Physical Society's Physics Planning Committee.

Kleppner said he talks to students about ways science influences society. He said the values of science are essential to everyone, not just physics majors.

"Both Clinton and Gore have brought the issue of technology to center stage," Kleppner said.

The new science adviser, appointed by President-elect Bill Clinton, is someone that Kleppner sees as having a leadership role in science technology.

Kleppner said he thinks Vice President-elect Al Gore will also have a leadership role in the advancement of scientific technology, due to his interest in the environment.

Kleppner is a graduate of Harvard and a member of the National Academy of Sciences .

While at Harvard, he worked on the development of the Maser, which is an early version of the laser, using microwaves instead of light waves.

His current research is concerned with quantum chaos, studies of hydrogen at extremely low temperatures and ultra-precise laser spectroscopy.

"He is known for his extreme accuracy in work on atomic properties," Larry Weaver, professor of physics, said.

Kleppner sees science as a source of hope, instead of as a threat to society, Weaver said.

Buy new books, earn bonus dollars for gifts

ROBBIE SPEARS

A new promotion gives students a chance to get their money's worth out of buying new textbooks at the K-State Union Bookstore.

Adrienne Brodsky, assistant promotion coordinator for Collegiate Advantage, said Prentice Hall Publishing is offering bonus dollars back to students who purchase their textbooks. These bonus dollars can be used toward gifts such as compact discs, tapes, Paramount home videos and AT&T long-distance gift certificates.

Brodsky said students can even pool their bonus dollars together with friends, so they can buy a more expensive gift.

Linda Wiemers, Union Bookstore book department manager, said not only will this action promote the bookstore, but it will give students incentive to buy selected new books.

Selected new Prentice Hall textbooks contain a sticker and a pamphlet describing their offer. According to the pamphlet, for each $10 spent on designated new Prentice Hall, Allyn & Bacon or Regents/Prentice Hall textbooks, a bonus of $2.50 will be given. The money can be spent on merchandise featured in a catalog.

Many students probably won't be back to find out about Prentice Hall's gift offer until next week because students don't realize what the pamphlet means until they get home, Wiemers said.

She said the only drawback to students is that it will take about a month for them to receive their gifts.

Grace Hatton, junior in pre-nursing, said she wished the promotion were on all the books, not just the new books.

Hatton said she thought students prefer used books and will continue to buy the used books instead of buying the new ones, even with the special offer.

K-State is one of 30 schools involved in textbook promotion.

Wildcats blow halftime lead, fall to KU

BRIAN W. KRATZER/Collegian

Anthony Beane, K-State point guard, tries to pass his way out of a Jayhawk trap set by Kansas guards Steve Woodberry and Adonis Jordan. Beane finished with a career-high nine assists.

STEVEN ROCK
Collegian

Prior to the nationally-televised game between KU and K-State Monday night, the Jayhawks were voted the No. 1 team in the nation by the Associated Press.

K-State's hopes of dropping the top-ranked team in the nation fell slowly but surely in the second half of the Hawks' 71-65 victory Monday night at Bramlage Coliseum.

The Jayhawks, now 15-1 and 3-0 in the conference, ended the Cats' five-game winning streak. K-State is now 10-3, including 2-1 — and in fourth place — in the Big Eight.

"We played a good team tonight, a better team," Cat coach Dana Altman said. "They beat us — but we're young, and we'll improve."

The Wildcats held KU to a season-low 24 first-half points. The Hawks, who came into the game averaging nearly 93 points a game and shooting 56 percent from the field, made just 10 of 29 first-half shots — a 34.5-percent clip.

That percentage ballooned to 70 percent in the second half, and KU outscored K-State by 14 points.

"They've improved a lot," Jayhawk guard Rex Walters said of the Cats. "Usually when I think of K-State — like last year — I think that there's no way we're going to lose.

"This year, they totally surprised us."

K-State took an eight-point halftime lead by shooting 52 percent from the floor and connecting on three of four 3-pointers.

Included in that first half was a 10-0 run just five minutes into the game. Sparked by a pair of successive Brian Henson treys, the Cats took an early 13-8 lead. K-State would never trail again in the first half.

"I think we just got in a rhythm," Henson said. "And that was because of our defense. Coach has always told us that if we play defense, the shots would come."

In the second half, neither the defense nor the shots came for K-State.

The Jayhawks put together a 10-0 run of their own early in the second period and eventually took their first lead of the game with 14 minutes to play. For the next four minutes, the two teams were tied three times, and Kansas never lead by more than two points.

But the buckets then stopped falling for K-State.

"Right in the middle of the second half, we needed a basket, and we couldn't get it," Wildcat guard Anthony Beane said.

Indeed, the Cats missed five of their next six shots. A pair of misses by both Ron Lucas and Vincent Jackson, coupled with an errant Aaron Collier shot opened the door for a nine-point Jayhawk lead.

K-State pulled within three points at the five-minute mark but couldn't make up the difference.

Altman cited poor free-throw shooting, including just two out of six in the final five minutes, as partial reasons for the loss.

"You shoot nine for 18 from the free-throw line, and you're going to have difficulties coming back," Altman said. "You just can't do that."

The home loss to KU — the tenth time in as many years for the Wildcats — won't hurt K-State emotionally, Altman said.

"Heck, it's just one game," he said. "I hope this wasn't a one-game season here.

"This was just one of 14 in the conference."

Walters pelted in head during aftermath of Jayhawks' 71-65 win

No. 1 Kansas defeated Kansas State 71-65 Monday night, its 10th straight win on the Wildcats' home court. But the post-game celebration was muted after a coin thrown from the stands hit Kansas' Rex Walters just above the left eye.

"I'm sorry, but I have to say something," said Kansas coach Roy Williams, his voice trembling with anger. "That's happened two times now. Two teams played their butts off and some sick individual does that. We don't need that."

Last year, Kansas' David Johanning was hit by an object thrown from the K-State crowd and suffered a cut on the back of the head.

"Whatever individual did that is sick," Williams said. "I'm not very tough, but you go find him and I can whip his butt."

Walters said he wasn't badly hurt.

"It's too bad," said Walters, who broke out of a season-long shooting slump last week and had 23 points to lead a second-half rally. "Kansas State has come a long way and their fans are still at that level."

Late letdown sinks K-State

BRIAN ANDERSON
Collegian

It takes two 20-minute halves to play a game of college basketball.

Monday night, K-State found that out.

The Wildcats held Kansas to a 34.5 percent field-goal percentage and 24 points in the first half.

Then the Jayhawks showed up.

In the second half, Kansas hit 70 percent from the field and 81 percent from the free-throw line to overcome the Cats, 71-65.

"We stopped waiting for them to roll over and play dead," Kansas coach Roy Williams said. "I congratulate K-State. In the first half, they were more aggressive. Defense in the the second half really turned it around."

Wildcat coach Dana Altman had two explanations for the letdown.

"Their defense and our lack of defense," he said. "The reason we had our lead was our defense. And then we backed off."

The Hawks took their first lead of the second half when Adonis Jordan sank a three-pointer with 14 minutes to play.

The teams traded leads until a Darrin Hancock dunk put KU ahead with 10 minutes to play.

K-State would never catch the Hawks.

Two players who were affected by the second-half letdown were senior forward Aaron Collier and sophomore guard Brian Henson.

Both players had 10 points at halftime to pace K-State. Combined, they scored a total of just five points in the second half, Collier finishing with 13 and Henson with 12.

"We let up late in the first half," Henson said. "We came out in the second half and didn't do anything.

"In the first half, our team was real comfortable. I think we played about as well a half as we could have. We played defense, rebounded, got good shots," he said.

So what hap-pened in the second half?

"No defense, we didn't rebound, lots of turnovers.

"We controlled the game in the first half. The game was in our hands," Henson said.

But the second-half letdowns are going to have to stop, he said.

"We proved that we aren't tough mentally.

"We've done this several times this year. We had a good first half and haven't put the second half together."

Jayhawks shut down leading scorer Jones

Only bucket for guard comes with 2 seconds left; junior finishes with 3 points

SCOTT ABEL
Collegian

The K-State program guide for Monday night's game against the Kansas Jayhawks featured junior guard Askia Jones.

The Wildcat offense did not.

"It was a terrible night for me," Jones said.

Jones, K-State's leading scorer, made his only basket with two seconds left in the game as the Cats lost to top-ranked KU Monday night at Bramlage Coliseum.

After a 25-point performance against Colorado Saturday, Jones made just one 3-point basket against the Hawks and missed both of his free-throw attempts.

"He did not have one of his better games," Coach Dana Altman said.

"Ski had a few opportunities that he turned down. He missed a couple shots early and kind of hesitated after that."

Jones, who has been averaging almost 14 points a game this season, fouled Hawk guard Steve Woodberry twice in the first five minutes.

The junior spent all but eight minutes of the first half on the bench, and after halftime, never found the offensive rhythm that allowed him to hit eight of his 15 attempts against Colorado.

"I could have stepped up," Jones said. "I should have stepped up when I first came in the second half.

"I wasn't aggressive enough on offense. I passed by some opportunities by passing the ball instead of taking it to the hole, dishing it off and trying to make something happen.

"I just didn't help the team the way I should," he said.

Guard Brian Henson said the Hawks' defense concentrated on Jones, which made it difficult for him to get into the Wildcats' offensive rhythm.

"They were real aware of Ski," said Henson, who scored 12 points. "He's a big part of our offense, and they were on him real tight all night.

"He had two fouls early and had to sit out a lot. And when your out early in the game, its hard to get a rhythm going.

"When he did get back in the game (in the first half), our team was really in a rhythm, and it was hard for him to get into it," Henson said.

Jones' three-point game tied his scoring low of last year, a 104-75 loss by the Cats to Oklahoma in Manhattan.

While Jones struggled, the Wildcats blew an eight-point halftime lead. The letdown was, Jones said, the result of mental fatigue.

"We need to learn something from this game," Jones said. "We need to learn as a team to play the whole 40 minutes.

"We need to come back to practice with the same attitude defensively and on rebounding that we had before.

"We know what we did wrong — we just need to take it from there."

Lady Cats fall to 0-4 in the Big Eight

The Lady Cats lost both weekend Big Eight home games — to Iowa State and Nebraska — leaving them 0-4, and last in the conference.

The Lady Cats are 7-6 overall, but have lost six of their last eight games.

K-State started out strong against Nebraska but lost 74-57. The Lady Cats' first-half efforts kept them within three of Nebraska.

In the first half, K-State tied the game at 28 with a pair of free throws by Andrea O'Neal. O'Neal was then fouled again to give K-State its first lead of the game. But in the second half the game changed, Yow said, because Nebraska mixed up its defensive strategy.

"I have to give credit to Nebraska's defense in the second half," she said. "That's a mark of a good team."

Nebraska posted the victory despite Karen Jennings, the team's leading scorer, being limited to just 10 points.

"Karen Jennings is not getting her usual points and things aren't going well for her, and they have some people coming through," Yow said. "I think that is a mark of a very good basketball team, and that lets you know that they are not a one-man team."

Lady Cat forward JoMoree Grattan said she made the game more difficult for Jennings by crowding her and keeping her away from the basket.

"I just thought about how she played last year," Grattan said. "They told me about 100 percent of the time she goes right, and so I stayed on the right side and she didn't make them."

Jennings made just five of her 15 shots.

K-State's Shanele Stires said she was not scared of Jennings.

"I had respect, not intimidation — what do I have to be intimidated by? I'm just going to go out there and do what I have to do," Stires said.

The Lady Cats started slow and failed to pick up the tempo, which resulted in a 67-61 loss to Iowa State Friday night.

Iowa State came into the game with a 1-13 record.

"I think we played the team's record," Yow said.

Kelly Moylan was six for nine from the 3-point line, breaking her own record for 3-point field goals made in a single game.

But Moylan said the loss could not help but overshadow her success from beyond the arc.

"I would have felt a lot better if we would have won the ball game," she said.

There were 16 lead changes in the game, and Iowa State's biggest lead was six. The Lady Cats never led by more than three points.

"We were playing their tempo," Leah Honeycutt said. "They were a step ahead of us instead of us being ahead of them."

Yow said K-State struggled defensively.

"Our offense to me almost came too easy to us tonight," Yow said. "We did not match our defense."

With 3:33 minutes left, Iowa State broke ahead, and K-State failed to score again.

Yow said the team had created a monster and ultimately could not handle the pressure.

"We looked like we were scared," she said. "We did not handle the pressure well."

"I still don't think we've reached that plateau to turn things around," Honeycutt said.

Foreman not excited about his matchup with Morrison

ASSOCIATED PRESS

RENO — Tommy Morrison thinks a fight between himself and George Foreman is one the public wants to see. The contracts are signed. The date, April 16, and site, Las Vegas, are set.

The promotion, however, appears shaky.

"I've really got to go home and sleep on this Tommy Morrison fight," the 44-year-old Foreman said after he and Morrison scored victories Saturday night at the Reno-Sparks Convention Center.

What Foreman, who was heavyweight champion in 1973-74, wants is a title shot against either Lennox Lewis (WBC) or Riddick Bowe (IBF, WBA).

"Maybe we can bump heads," Bowe said in an HBO interview between Morrison's eighth-round victory over Carl "The Truth" Williams, and Foreman's eighth-round win over Pierre Coetzer.

It appears, however, that a Lewis-Foreman bid is more likely.

"Lewis has come to the table with a very serious offer," Ron Weathers, a Foreman advisor, said Sunday.

Weathers said Foreman would get 55 percent of the gross revenue because "George is the ticket-seller."

Lewis, of Britain, is scheduled to defend against Tony Tucker April 24 in London.

Bowe is scheduled to defend against Michael Dokes Feb. 6 at New York's Madison Square Garden, and against Ray Mercer at Atlantic City, N.J.

Foreman has a three-fight, $18 million deal with HBO, which began Saturday night. But Seth Abraham was not annoyed by the possibility that the Foreman-Morrison fight might not happen.

Abraham is president of sports for Time Warner, which owns HBO and TVKO and presents pay-per-view fights. A Foreman title bid would be on TVKO.

Abraham said HBO-TVKO also had deals with Bowe for six fights, with Lewis for four and with Morrison for two.

Williams almost made talk of a Foreman-Morrison fight academic.

After being knocked down early in the first and third rounds, the 33-year-old Williams knocked the 24-year-old Morrison down twice.

Morrison, at 228 pounds, won when referee Mills Lane stopped the fight at 2:10 of the eighth round with Williams, 225, being battered against the ropes.

"The best thing we gained was the experience, beating a fighter like Carl Williams," said Morrison, who won for the 35th time against one defeat and scored his 31st knockout.

The 258-pound Foreman battered and bloodied the 31-year-old Coetzer, 216, knocking him down twice before referee Joe Cortez stopped the match at 1:48 of the eighth round.

Foreman scored the first knockdown with a minute gone in the fourth round. After beating on the South African for another minute, Foreman asked Cortez to stop the fight.

"I asked him, 'What in the world is wrong with you, man? What are you doing,'" Foreman said. "It's not like this guy was going to get his act back together and come back and get George Foreman."

Foreman has a 27-1 record with 26 knockouts since ending a 10-year retirement in 1987. His career record is 72-3, with 67 knockouts

▶MICHIGAN'S WEBBER BREAKS NOSE

ANN ARBOR, Mich. (AP) — Chris Webber, Michigan's star sophomore forward, broke his nose during practice Monday and was questionable for the Wolverines' upcoming game at Minnesota.

Webber leads Michigan with an average 20.4 points, 9.6 rebounds and 3.3 blocked shots per game.

If cleared to play Wednesday night against the Gophers, he will wear a plastic mask. If not, Eric Riley will substitute for him, coach Steve Fisher said in a statement.

Riley's elbow struck the bridge of Webber's nose during a defensive drill. Webber left practice immediately to be examined by a university doctor when it was determined his nose was fractured.

"An injury to Chris Webber does not mean everything will slow down for us," Fisher said.

COLUMBIA, Mo. (AP) — The Missouri Tigers built a 40-29 lead by halftime and then opened the second half with nine straight points to down visting Coastal Carolina Chanticleers 94-69 Monday night.

The Tigers shot 59 percent from the field for the game, but the poor free-throw shooting that has haunted the Tigers all season kept the lead fairly close for much of the game. Missouri made only nine of 21 free throws.

With their win, Missouri upped its season record to 11-3.

Young Cowboys reach for top

SAN FRANCISCO — They are brash, they are bold, and they are back in the Super Bowl after a 13-year absence.

The Dallas Cowboys, the youngest team in the NFL with an average age of 26, settled an old score with San Francisco Sunday by defeating the 49ers 30-20 in the NFC championship game.

"In the eyes of a lot of our fans, this is a payback for what happened 11 years ago," said owner Jerry Jones, referring to the Cowboys' 28-27 loss to San Francisco in the 1981 NFC title game. "This heals a lot of wounds."

In that game, "The Catch" by Dwight Clark on a pass from Joe Montana won the day in the final minute.

On Sunday, it was the passing of Troy Aikman, the running and receiving of Emmitt Smith, and the spectacular receptions of wide receiver Alvin Harper that put the 49ers away.

Aikman was superb in the second half, leading the Cowboys on three touchdown drives and completing 13 of 16 passes for 204 yards.

"I couldn't help but marvel at Troy's performance," said former Dallas quarterback Roger Staubach, who prowled the sidelines during the game. "He took everything San Francisco gave him. He dumped the ball off, and when he found man-for-man coverage, he made the right call. It was spectacular. Where are all of his critics now?"

The Cowboys were immediately installed seven-point Super Bowl favorites over the Buffalo Bills, who will be making their third consecutive appearance.

Dallas coach Jimmy Johnson, who pumped his fists triumphantly into the air on his way to the Cowboys' locker room, said simply, "It was Troy's game. He has come a long way, and he's brought me with him."

Johnson, who won a national collegiate title at Miami in 1987, can carve out a little piece of history with a victory in the Super Bowl at Pasadena, Calif. No coach has ever won both the collegiate and professional championships.

Bills' Kelly answers critics

ASSOCIATED PRESS

MIAMI — Jim Kelly took more of a hammering from critics before the game than he did from the Miami Dolphins.

In the end, Kelly triumphed over both, leading the Buffalo Bills to their third straight Super Bowl in a 29-10 victory in the AFC championship on Sunday.

Returning from a three-week layoff because of a knee injury, Kelly was stung by those who said the Bills should start Frank Reich, the veteran backup who took over for Kelly and led Buffalo to their two earlier playoff victories.

"This is probably without a doubt the sweetest victory I've ever been associated with because it's almost like at the beginning of the week, I should apologize to everybody for feeling good," Kelly said.

He completed all but 7 of 24 passes for 177 yards and threw two touchdowns behind an offensive line that allowed only one sack. Buffalo's defense did the rest, sacking Dan Marino four times and limiting him to a 22-for-45 passing day.

"I cannot think of a time when a quarterback entered a game under more pressure than Jim Kelly did," coach Marv Levy said.

"Ernest Hemingway once defined character as grace under pressure. Jim Kelly showed that today."

The Bills insisted there was no quarterback controversy because Levy maintained all along that Kelly would be back as the starter as soon as his knee, sprained in Buffalo's season finale Dec. 27 against Houston, was ready.

There was a little soreness in the knee because of the brace he wore during the game, Kelly said, but it should dissipate in the two weeks before the Bills take on the Dallas Cowboys in the Super Bowl.

Kelly said he's ready for the inevitable questions about the Bills' losses in the last two Super Bowls.

"I'd rather them be asking me than asking someone else," he said.

Space projects return today

NASA programs give professors chance to study effects of zero gravity

As space shuttle Endeavor returns today, so will the 15 experiments sent into space by more than 32 professors and students from K-State.

During the past several months, various labs within the Division of Biology have been preparing experiments to be carried out in zero gravity.

The majority of the experiments that were carried on the shuttle studied the effects of gravity on living systems.

The experiment sent up by Robin Denell, professor of biology, studied the basic biology of the Tribolium, otherwise known as the red flower beetle.

"The question is, 'Does gravity affect the development process in any way?' And if it does, if you eliminate gravity, perhaps the females returned to Earth will be sterile or not produce normal progeny," Mike Abbott, post-doctorate research scientist, said.

For this experiment, four different viles, with five female beetles in each, will develop in space.

Once these viles are returned, the females will hatch and then be mated. The progeny will be collected and studied for signs of abnormalities.

The lab of Terry Johnson, distinguished professor of biology, has isolated a peptide which they said they believe stops cells from dividing.

Two different experiments were sent from Johnson's lab.

The first experiment used a line of insect cells. The cells will be used to see if they are able to respond to a particular chemical under various controls, he said.

Johnson said the second experiment involved PC-12 cells. These cells, when studied on Earth, go through massive skeletal changes when injected with a nerve growth factor, he said. The experiment aims to determine if the absence of gravity affects the way in which the cells grow when injected.

An experiment by James Guikema, associate professor of biology, sent sweet clover roots into space to try to understand how roots perceive gravity, or the lack of gravity.

On Earth, roots always grow downward. Using zero gravity will help scientists understand how Earth's gravity controls root

Health care a hot topic

There are 407 different health-insurance companies in the state, she said. Health-care workers have to fill out 407 different insurance forms.

"Doctors are always complaining how they have to pay so many workers to handle insurance," Hochhauser said.

An attempt might be made to introduce a universal health-care bill, she said.

"I think somebody will put a bill in the hopper. I've always said, though, that I don't think Kansas can solve its health-care problems without help from the federal government," Hochhauser said.

Along with insurance reform, regulating purchases of health-care equipment would help keep down health-care costs, Hochhauser said.

"There needs to be a moratorium on the inventory of health-care equipment by everyone. Expensive equipment lays idle, and then it still has to be paid for. Certain equipment can be regionalized," she said. "They don't have a burn center in every hospital in Kansas. The same should be true for MRIs and CAT scans."

Retention key to KSU growth

Prospective students recruited through efforts of alumni, faculty

"K-State grew, not by accident, but by planned growth. We must be ready to continue to grow into the 21st century and plan even better than we did in the late 1980s."
PAT BOSCO
DEAN OF STUDENT LIFE

DAVID GROSKO
Collegian

The recruiting process for prospective K-State students is a complex and integral part of the University.

Recruiting is done through a combination of efforts by faculty, staff, students, admission representatives and the Alumni Association.

In 1986, when Jon Wefald became the University's 12th president, his top objective was to stop the enrollment decline, said Pat Bosco, associate vice president and dean of student life.

"I was asked to develop an enrollment management plan," Bosco said. "We wanted to improve relations with currently enrolled students and prospective students, to re-establish relationships with high schools throughout the state of Kansas and to improve our overall efforts in the area of retention.

"Since then, the student body has grown from approximately 17,500 to 20,000 students," he said. "We have recaptured a market share of the high-school and community college market that K-State has enjoyed for a number of years."

K-State visits every high school in the state, Dennis O'Keefe, admissions representative and alumnus, said.

He said this is done by dividing the state into seven sections and assigning an admissions representative to each one.

"The presentations given to the high schools in the fall differ from the ones in the spring," O'Keefe said.

"In the fall, we attend many College Programming Conferences and talk about academic programs, financial assistance and work on providing a service relationship to high-school counselors," he said.

O'Keefe said the spring presentations are geared more toward students coming to K-State. The presentations include topics on housing, student life and college in general.

Brad Beets, director of alumni clubs, said the K-State Alumni Association gets involved in two facets of student recruitment.

The Alumni Club program consists of about 28 clubs throughout the state, he said.

Members of the club will try to personalize the effort by having a picnic or dinner at their home and invite prospective high-school juniors and seniors, he said.

"We want to give the student a good feel for what is going on at K-State," Beets said.

"The second thing we do is College Nights," he said. "It is for prospective students as well as their parents. This is involved more with the admissions office, staff and current students."

The recruiting challenge of the future is to continue to manage K-State's enrollment, to take into account the popularity of K-State and to maintain the quality of the University, Bosco said.

"K-State grew, not by accident, but by planned growth," Bosco said.

"We must be ready to continue to grow into the 21st century and plan even better than we did in the late 1980s," he said.

Future planning will be crucial because the last three graduating high school classes had declining numbers, Bosco said.

"From the 1993 graduating class on, there will be a 20-percent growth in high-school graduates," Bosco said.

"This will be very important for a school like K-State, because we are the number one choice among Kansas high-school and community college students," he said.

Police chief asked to resign

Stone refused comment.

"This was brought up in front of my executive committee after I'd received phone calls from prominent citizens in this community, including white business people and white community leaders, concerned with the latest accusations," Crump said.

"It's not just a black thing. It's in light of the total allegations. Five allegations at one time against a chief of police doesn't look good, and there's no other way to cut it," he said.

The Kansas Bureau of Investigation and state officials are investigating the former allegations.

"I'm sincere when I say this, because from a personal standpoint I've been through false allegations, but he should fight these charges if he's innocent," said Crump, who retired from the Wichita police force before Stone was hired.

Shuttle experiments return growth.

Although professors and students said they are excited about the chance to experiment in space, not everyone feels the same.

"I think the main problem is that a part of the scientific community tends not to take seriously these experiments," Emmanuel Hilaire, graduate student from France, said. "They think it's a waste of funding, and they don't see the purpose of these experiments. I feel in the long run the experiments are going to be useful."

Richard Consigli, distinguished professor of biology, conducted an experiment on viral proteins. The goal was to see if the proteins assembled themselves better in space than on Earth. The benefit of such possibilities could be far-reaching, even to the extent of treating cancer.

"This is a great opportunity to have shuttle flights at K-State. It involves professors, doctorates, graduate students and undergraduate students. It is a team effort of each lab involved," Consigli said.

K-State received this opportunity through BioServe Space Technologies and the NASA Specialized Center of Research and Training.

King urges politicians to keep promises

ASSOCIATED PRESS

ATLANTA — Martin Luther King Jr.'s daughter urged people marking his holiday Monday to honor him by keeping public officials true to their word — and she suggested that President-elect Clinton has not been.

"A true follower of the prophet must point out when people say one thing during the campaign and do another, whether it's budget cuts, tax cuts or Haitian immigration," the Rev. Bernice Albertine King told 1,100 people who filled Ebenezer Baptist Church, where her father used to preach.

"All we say, President-elect Clinton, is say what you mean and mean what you say. Let your yea be a yea and your nay be a nay."

The day honoring the slain civil rights leader was a state holiday for the first time in Arizona and New Hampshire.

In Arizona, where voters approved the holiday in November, thousands marched to the state Capitol in Phoenix. "This is a victory and commemoration," organizer Gene Blue said.

New Hampshire Gov. Steve Merrill issued an executive order last week changing the name of Civil Rights Day to King Day. A bill to change the name permanently is pending before the Legislature. On Monday, about 200 people gathered on the Statehouse lawn for the ringing of a Liberty Bell replica.

Thousands marched in Denver to honor King, while two dozen white supremacists rallied at the state Capitol. The Ku Klux Klan rally resulted in a few disturbances, but a large police presence prevented a recurrence of last year's melee by pro-King demonstrators, which ended with 21 arrests and businesses vandalized.

Denver Mayor Wellington Webb, who is black, exhorted the crowd to ignore the white supremacists. "I'm big enough where I'm not worried about someone smaller than me," he said.

In Memphis, Tenn., 10,000 people visited the National Civil Rights Museum in the former Lorraine Motel, where King was shot to death in 1968.

YOU'RE ASKING ME?

Eerie premonition leads Casanova to copy center in search of romance

DEAR CASSANDRA,

Last semester, there was a girl in my physics class that really caught my eye. One day after class I noticed that she had left her gloves in her seat. Realizing this was a perfect opportunity to meet her, I grabbed the gloves and walked out into the hall to find her. Much to my chagrin, I found her talking to who I assumed to be her boyfriend. So I handed her the gloves and went on my way.

Well, after that incident, I decided to pretty much give up on the idea of meeting her, but last Thursday something strange happened. I was in my car on the way to the K-State Union, when suddenly her face popped into my mind. At the time, I thought it was a little weird to be thinking about her because I hadn't seen her since finals week, and I really hadn't thought much about her during that time.

Anyway, I walked into the copy center to pick up a reading packet, and there she was. Now, normally, I'm not one to approach someone I don't know, but the moment I saw her, I decided I was going to talk to her. While I was waiting to pay for my packet, I saw her walk outside toward the job bulletin board. After I paid for my supplies, I followed her out the door and went to talk to her.

We talked about how physics class had turned out and other unimportant topics. But in my infatuated stupor I forgot to ask some pretty important questions: What is your name? What's your number? Would you like to go out sometime? Do you prefer waxed or unwaxed dental floss?

Cassandra, I know that this isn't Love Connection, but if you could offer some advice as to how I might find this person it would be greatly appreciated.

No Isaac Newton

DEAR NEWT,

I must admit I was touched by your letter. You obviously have been thinking a lot about this special gal. In fact, I must admit being a little jealous — I wish my man spent that much time thinking about me. Do you have a brother?

You could check with your physics instructor, but he or she may not be able to provide you with her identity.

My advice to you would be to do what has already worked — think about her as you drive around in your car, and then go immediately to the Union. Or you could just hope she reads this and contacts me. Check back, hon, I'll let you know.

But dear readers, please don't start asking Cassandra to be your matchmaker. This letter just happened to catch me in a romantic mood.

TIPS FOR WRITING A CLASSIFIED AD

Always put what item or service you are advertising first. This helps potential buyers find what they are looking for.

Don't use abbreviations. Many buyers are confused by abbreviations.

Consider including the price. This tells buyers if they are looking at something in their price range.

CATEGORIES

To help you find what you are looking for, the classified ads have been arranged by category and sub-category. All categories are marked by one of the large images, and sub-categories are preceded by a number designation.

WE DO NOT USE PHONE NUMBERS OR LAST NAMES IN PERSONALS.

Nelson leaves broadcasting legacy behind director from 1967 to 1972. Norma Lawrence, a sports information office specialist, first came to K-State in 1967, and Nelson was her first boss.

"He was a great K-Stater, and he would help everybody with anything he could," she said. "He was just a big-hearted person.

"I've had some wonderful bosses, and he was one of them. He was a great man to work for."

In his 25 years on the job, Nelson was selected by his peers as the Kansas Sportscaster of the Year five times.

But Isaacson said she didn't know about many of her father's accomplishments, and she first learned of them by reading the newspapers.

"He was such a humble man," she said. "I didn't know about half the the awards he had won. I think he would find all the attention embarrassing."

And Isaacson said she was surprised at the amount of well-wishers that she and her mother, Dorothy, have heard from.

"I knew he was a wonderful man," she said. "I just didn't know everyone else knew."

Nelson's broadcasts were complete with some of his own pet phrases, including the likes of a "rip-snortin', hootenang, double-barreled, deep-dish dilly," and a shot that was "closer than a sweetheart's whisper."

"He had a whole book of those sayings that he used," Lawrence said. "He was a real fun person to be around."

The first game Nelson broadcast was a 1951 K-State victory over Kansas, 65-51. Nelson was a 1949 graduate of K-State and at the time worked for KKSU, a University extension station.

Monday night, members of the basketball team wore black bands on their uniforms in in the game against Kansas in memory of him.

Other survivors include his son, Dr. Gregory Nelson of Dodge City.

Iraqi hotel hit by cruise missile as bombing raids continue

American resolve to enforce U.N. resolutions regarding Iraq did not extend to those concerning Israel of Bosnia-Herzegovina.

King Fahd of Saudi Arabia, who put his country's bases at the disposal of the allied jets carrying out the raids, said U.N. Security Council resolutions must "be respected and implemented ... whether they pertain to the situation in the Gulf or the Palestinian case and that of the deportees, or that of the nation of Bosnia-Herzegovina."

Bush, returning to the White House from a weekend at Camp David, Md., told reporters he was grateful for Clinton's support. "There's no division on this question at all," he said.

The Pentagon declared Sunday's cruise-missile firing at a nuclear weapons-related complex a success but acknowledged hitting the al-Rashid hotel in downtown Baghdad eight miles from the intended target.

"We regret the loss of life," a senior Pentagon official said, insisting on anonymity.

U.S. officials had speculated earlier that the hotel had been hit by Iraqi anti-aircraft fire.

The Pentagon said Monday's bombing deprived Iraq of a coordinated system for an air defense network in the south.

The primary targets Monday were anti-aircraft missile batteries that survived in the southern no-fly zone last Wednesday when coalition allies renewed military action against Iraq for the first time in two years.

In the latest strike, 69 American, British and French planes streaked into southern Iraq. The bombs were dropped by 10 Air Force F-15E Strike Eagles, four F-16 Fighting Falcons and four British Tornadoes as the other aircraft provided cover and support.

"All bombs appeared to hit the target," Lt. Col. Robert Haselhoff, an F-15E pilot, said.

Explosion destroys mobile home

BRIAN W. KRATZER/Collegian

Firefighters spray water on flames from a mobile home Tuesday evening at 6030 Tuttle Terrace No. 29 after a gas stove exploded. K-State student Kristina Molzahn, junior in psychology, wasn't home at the time, but her guest, Anthony Carrington, was injured. The mobile home was a total loss.

DIANE HUTCHISON
Collegian

An explosion destroyed a student's mobile home Tuesday evening at the Tuttle Terrace Mobile Home Park.

Kristina Molzahn, junior in psychology, was apparently at work when the accident occurred. She had moved in about 20 days ago.

The park is owned by Ed Doyle of Riley. One person, Anthony Carrington, suffered minor burns.

Randy Fountain, the park manager, said Carrington was staying as a guest at the mobile home, when the fire started.

"There was a leak in the stove," John Farley, a neighbor, said. "I guess when he turned it on it exploded."

Carrington called the fire department at 5:06 p.m. and requested an ambulance.

"He refused treatment at first, but they convinced him to go and get checked out," Fountain said. "He had minor burns to one arm."

Fountain said Molzahn and Carrington went to stay with one of Carrington's cousins.

"We gave her the option of moving into another mobile home tonight," Fountain said. "We have one that she can move into immediately."

The mobile home, 6030 Tuttle Terrace No. 29, was a total loss. The cost of belongings that were destroyed in the fire has not been estimated yet.

"She was a little shook up to talk about anything," Fountain said. "She'll be back tomorrow to go over them.

"We know that she had some textbooks, and we talked to her about replacing them immediately so that she can go back to school," he said. "We told her that we would help her in any way that we can."

NEWS DIGEST

▶CAR 'WARMS UP,' CATCHES FIRE

DEANNA ADAMS
Collegian

K-State student Harry Johnson wanted his car to warm up, but he had no idea just how hot it would get. He was preparing to leave work at the Division of Continuing Education, 1615 Anderson Ave., when he discovered his car, a 1981 Buick Regal, was on fire.

"I went out to warm up my car while I closed up, and when I came back, there was a small fire underneath," he said. "I couldn't get back into the building to call because my keys were in the car, so I had to go over to the Ramada Inn to call the fire department."

The fire had begun at about 7:10 p.m., and when firefighters arrived about 10 minutes later the fire had spread to the rest of the engine.

"I had just replaced the radiator, but it was still running bad," Johnson said. "I was planning on taking it in tomorrow."

Lt. Arlen Loecker of the Manhattan Fire Department said the probable cause of the blaze was a leak in the fuel line. Damage was about $1,500, he said.

▶PROJECTILE BLASTS INTO TRIG CLASS

WADE SISSON
Collegian

A plane trigonometry class was interrupted by a projectile Tuesday morning in Cardwell Hall.

Campus police sergeant Andrew Amaro said an unidentified object passed through a window between 9:45 and 10:00 a.m. in Cardwell 129. The window is located on the north side of Cardwell Hall.

No injuries were reported, though students were struck by glass debris, he said.

"As to why it happened, I have no answer," Amaro said. "The instructor didn't feel it was out of revenge, and all the students were in class."

The instructor refused to comment on the incident.

While no projectile was found in the classroom, the report from the campus police investigator, Richard Herrman, said it was probably a pellet or a b.b.

"It was definitely a straight-across level shot, so someone would've had to be level with that first floor window," Amaro said.

Given this evidence, Amaro said he was looking into the possibility that the shot was fired from the Military Science building, Bushnell Hall or Throckmorton Hall.

He said no firing exercises had occurred in Military Science Tuesday morning, and that no one in the building uses air rifles

Students experience politics first-hand

WADE SISSON
Collegian

Election year 1992 meant more than hard work for K-State's Young Democrats and College Republicans.

It was a learning experience.

"There's a lot about politics that you can't be taught in a classroom," said Richard Baier, junior in political science and treasurer for Young Democrats.

"The biggest thing I learned was that it doesn't take a lot of time to get involved," said Neil Neaderhiser, senior in engineering technology and chairman of College Republicans.

"And time is more important in campaigns than money. That's one thing students have to offer," Neaderhiser said.

Baier and his fellow officers were involved not only in the Clinton campaign and the state races, but they also worked on Michelle Smith's campaign against Sen. Lana Oleen, R-Manhattan, for the Kansas Senate.

Smith is a sophomore in political science at K-State.

"Besides eating, sleeping and classes, I campaigned for Michelle and Clinton," said Ray Kowalczewski, senior in economics and president of Young Democrats.

Running for office brought many changes to the life of Smith, vice president of Young Democrats.

"Being a candidate, I had to watch what I was wearing. I couldn't dress too young or too wild," Smith said. "I had to be conservative in dress and with my hair and make-up.

"As a candidate, you see such a different perspective," she said. "I kind of wish people would run for office just so they could understand the process."

Smith's husband Mike, a junior in nuclear engineering and secretary for Young Democrats, said he spent 12 hours a day on his wife's campaign.

"On other campaigns you blow up balloons, and you don't really get to do anything," Mike Smith said. "But with this campaign, you got first-hand experience. I have a whole new appreciation for people running for public office."

Aside from Smith's campaign, the group staffed the Riley County Democratic Headquarters in Manhattan and delivered campaign literature door to door. Members also wrote letters to local newspapers and sponsored election information tables in the K-State Union.

"Up to November, I didn't do much else but College Republicans," Neaderhiser said. "I came back from the convention all excited."

Smith said: "I think our biggest accomplishment was getting out and telling the people what Clinton was about."

On Nov. 3, all the hard work paid off. Though Smith lost to Oleen, she said election night was still a victory for Democrats.

"The highlight was listening to Clinton give his acceptance speech," Smith said.

"Yes," Kowalczewski said. "It was like, 'God, there's somebody competent in the White House.' "

For Neaderhiser and the College Republicans, election night was not a complete loss.

"I worked on campaigns for 12 people, and only three lost. And Bush took Kansas," Neaderhiser said. "What more could we have done in this area? In a way we didn't lose that election."

Both organizations will continue to watch the aftermath of the election and plan to sponsor educational lectures this semester, Kowalczewski and Neaderhiser said.

Manhattan to celebrate Clinton's inauguration

WADE SISSON
Collegian

With Inauguration Day here, local Clinton supporters are planning a celebration of their own.

Manhattan will have its own Little Apple Inaugural Ball, sponsored by the Riley County Democratic Party, K-State's Young Democrats chapter and the Riley County Clinton/Gore Team, said Chris Cokinos, co-chairman for the Clinton/Gore campaign in Riley County.

"It is our way of celebrating, because not everyone gets invited or can afford to go to Washington, D.C.," Michelle Smith, vice president of Young Democrats, said. "We're helping sponsor it so we can get the whole community involved.

The formal/semi-formal event will include music and dancing. Snack foods and alcoholic beverages will be provided, Smith said.

The ball will be from 8 to 11 p.m. tonight, at Wareham Opera House, 410 Poyntz Ave.

Tickets can be purchased from the Young Democrats' table in the K-State Union, the Dusty Bookshelf, 700 N. Manhattan Ave., Edelman Associates, 404 Humboldt, or by calling 776-2000.

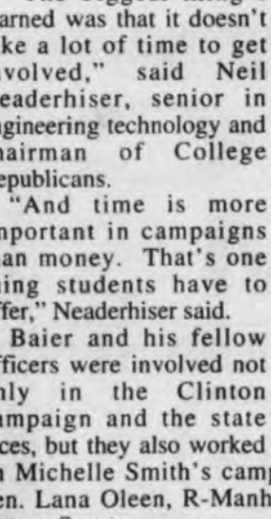
Student admission is $5, and general admission is $10.

Clinton pledges to keep policy against Iraq

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — President-elect Clinton, hours away from inheriting the volatile standoff with Saddam Hussein, greeted Iraq's cease-fire offer on Tuesday with skepticism and bluntly warned that defiance would trigger more military strikes.

"We need to see Iraq change its behavior," Clinton communications director George Stephanopoulos said in a terse response to Saddam's announcement. "We need full compliance with the U.N. resolutions."



Saddam's sudden promise to stop firing at allied aircraft patrolling the no-fly zones over Iraq raised hopes of reduced tensions in the Middle East when Clinton, untested in global and military affairs, takes office at noon Wednesday.

Clinton himself said nothing publicly about Iraq. But aides, speaking for him, pledged continuity in the hard-line U.S. policy as the hour approached when the Bush administration's two-year confrontation with Saddam would become an instant Clinton administration foreign policy dilemma.

Advisers said Clinton was weighing an array of options from the Pentagon and his own camp, including the possibility of expanding military responses to Iraqi violations to targeting

Convocation Lecture to address racial prejudice

JARED SAVAGE
Collegian

Adele Dutton Terrell, program director for the National Institute Against Prejudice and Violence, will deliver the first Convocation Lecture of 1993 at 10:30 a.m. Thursday in McCain Auditorium.

Her speech,"Rethinking the Dream: Visions for the Twenty-First Century," will be in cooperation with the Martin Luther King Jr. Observance Committee.

Terrell's responsibilities are to coordinate the Institute's response programs and provide technical assistance. She also serves as a consultant to public and private agencies, fosters establishment of victim assistance programs and manages the Institute's information clearinghouse.

Before becoming director of the Institute, Terrell did her undergraduate study in sociology, which was followed by professional training in urban planning and public policy analysis.

This led to a career with academic, government and private sector agencies addressing human rights issues, she said.

The Institute Against Prejudice and Violence, a non-profit organization, was established in 1984 to enhance understanding of the causes and consequences of bigotry, intergroup conflict and intimidation based on race, religion, ethnicity or sexual orientation.

Preceding Terrell's lecture will be a pre-Convocation forum at 7:30 p.m. Thursday in Union 213.

The forum will explore the topics of prejudice in contemporary society.

A post-Convocation question-and-answer session will be at 1:30 p.m. Thursday in Union 213.

ON THE AGENDA

Center to guide undecided students

"At least 46 percent of all incoming students indicate that they are not at all sure of their choice for a major, and only one in five will actually graduate from their initial major."

TRACY FRASER
COORDINATOR OF THE ACADEMIC CAREER AND INFORMATION CENTER

MICHELLE ROGERS
Collegian

Students who are thinking of changing majors, looking for careers or needing academic assistance will have a new place to turn this semester.

The Academic Career and Information Center will be open for students at the end of January and will be located in Holton Hall 014.

"Only 32 percent of entering freshmen indicate being very sure of their choice of an academic major," Tracey Fraser, coordinator of the ACIC, said. "At least 46 percent of all incoming students indicate that they are not at all sure of their choice for a major, and only one in five will actually graduate from their initial major.

She said the ACIC was developed to help these students make choices about their majors and careers.

The ACIC was set up by a task force and has been in the planning stages for more than a year. The proposal for the center was made to Student Senate in mid-November, 1992.

"I'm anxious for the center to open to see the plans come together and go into action," Fraser said.

The ACIC was developed for the purpose of providing programs, services and resources to assist students with the career planning process.

"We hope that all students who need to make choices about majors and careers will be the first to use the center because that is what we've developed it for," said Sara Doornbos, assistant coordinator of the ACIC.

Some of the services the ACIC will provide include DISCOVER, a computer-based career planning and information system, curriculum guides, academic profiles of majors and a career information library, she said.

To assist students with these various services, the ACIC has trained student career specialists, Fraser said.

The ACIC staff will also be speaking to classes and in an outreach program to inform and heighten awareness of the center's functions to students around campus, Fraser said. The ACIC will welcome walk-ins, as well as, appointments.

Wamego theater receives grant

Community interest sparked for renovation

ROBBIE SPEARS
Collegian

The Columbian Theatre in Wamego, which is known for its hundred-year-old paintings, was awarded a $130,000 grant for restoration.

"The money received from the Kansas Department of Commerce and Tourism is for the restoration of the main ballroom of the facility," Ray Morris, executive director of the Columbian Foundation, said.

The idea for the renovation started in 1989 when town meetings were held to discuss the downtown revitalization project. The outcome of the meetings showed there was a lot of interest in the Columbian Theatre. People wanted to return it to its former basic style.

"In these meetings, people were not only interested in a strong community theatre, they wanted to be in the productions," Morris said.

Since then, the building has been open and used for proms, lectures, weddings and exhibits. Although, over the past year there has been a lot of fund raising to get the entire building restored. It is estimated it will take $1.5 million to restore the building completely. Morris said the fund-raising drive was started by a 100-day media blitz.

The money will be used for 'minor' things such as putting in restrooms, cooling and heating and modern stage technology, he said.

"In the earlier years, people used to have to go to the drugstore to go to the bathroom because there were no toilets in the theatre," Morris said.

The main attraction of the Columbian Theatre is the six large paintings located on the second floor of the building. These paintings are from the Columbian World Exposition of Chicago in 1893 and are valued at $790,000. The paintings are also the only ones still to be found from the Expo.

DARREN WHITLEY/Collegian

Raymond Morris, executive director of the Columbian Theatre Foundation, stands in front of one of the 1893 Columbian Exposition and World's Fair paintings found beneath the theater's stage.

Morris said between 75,000 and 100,000 people come to see the paintings within a year.

"Just the size of the paintings are overpowering to people," he said.

The paintings are still in good condition. This is partly because the second floor of the building had been closed from 1929 to 1950, and the paintings were untouched during this time.

The Columbian Theatre was originally owned by J.C. Rogers, a local banker and businessman. Rogers attended the 1893 fair and was amazed by what he saw, Morris said. He returned to Wamego with the six paintings and many other artifacts.

In the past few years there has been a lot of interest in the paintings.

"The Smithsonian Institute was very interested to hear that we had paintings from the 1893 fair," Morris said.

The Terra Museum of Chicago has also requested to show the paintings during the 100th anniversary of the Chicago fair.

Two-thirds of the $1.5 million needed for the restoration has been raised. He said $800,000 has come from the local community, and $168,000 has been promised or already received.

"We will have the bids from the engineering companies around the 19th of February, so work will be started soon," Morris said.

"This is an excellent investment that will help produce large dollars in return," Ruth Maus, Director of Communications at the Kansas Department of Commerce and Housing, said.

Maus said the grants were decided by a three-member tourism committee that is experienced in the field of tourism in Kansas, and this committee decided which areas needed the most funding.

"We're putting a lot more money back into the state," she said.

Publishers display local art, writings

JARED SAVAGE
Collegian

There's a new outlet for imaginative writing and artwork circulating throughout the Manhattan area.

The Purple Thistle started as an attempt to showcase the creative talents of people living in and around Manhattan. It includes short stories, poetry and various types of artwork.

The work is currently available at Vital Vinyl Records and the Dusty Bookshelf.

Its publisher, also called the Purple Thistle, is operated by two Manhattan residents, John Scott and Chad Myers. They said they wanted to produce something that put no stipulations on the creativity of the artist or the language in which they wrote.

"We are always writing, and I know a few people who also write. We wanted to show that Kansas also has home-grown writers that are weird," said Scott, who contributed three works of his own to the first edition.

Myers, who contributed poetry to the Purple Thistle, said he didn't think anyone would be interested in publishing his poetry. So he and Scott decided to do it on their own.

"We didn't want to limit ourselves. The language is different. So we thought it better to do it ourselves. We had Ag Press put it together because we also wanted quality over quantity," he said.

The unifying theme of the Purple Thistle is that it represents works from people in the Manhattan area. They recruited submissions from people they worked with or knew. They said they plan to expand the scope of writers and artists for the next edition, due out this April.

Another part of the theme is that they are honest, unedited works with no limitations that might result if someone else had published it, Scott said.

"We called people at the English and art departments to see if they might be interested. We also contacted the Espresso Royale. There are a lot of creative people out there who don't know where to get their works published," he said.

If they get their way, the Purple Thistle will only be the first in a line of publications from their publishing establishment.

"We want to publish our own stuff through it. We'd also like to put out some educational software and other works from people around the region," said Scott, who said he saw this as an opportunity for other people who haven't been published to get published.

Myers and Scott began by financing the Purple Thistle out of their own pockets, thinking that advertisers probably wouldn't want to place an ad in something sure to be considered controversial.

Not wanting advertisers is part of how they decided to use the name Purple Thistle.

"It's honest. It's just what came about. Our work is analogous to how the Purple Thistle is treated. It's a beautiful flower, but people are always cutting it down. That's how the name actually came about," Scott said.

Myers and Scott also did all the layout and editing on a personal computer, having a picture-ready product ready for the press. Friends assisted in photographing the artwork and preparing the final copy.

Despite having to pay the enormous cost of producing hundreds of copies of the publication, Scott said he and his partner have derived a sense of satisfaction and accomplishment from their work.

"We're not making any money, but I really enjoy doing it. And that's the most important part," Scott said.

Myers said he agreed.

"A lot of cosmopolitans think that this is Conservativille. We're just showing what's out there as far as talent goes," he said.

'Taxi Driver' explores seamier side of New York

AMY COX
Collegian

Loneliness in a checkered sedan is the axis around which the film "Taxi Driver" rotates as Travis Bickle takes on a job as a New York cab driver.

Bickle, portrayed by Robert DeNiro, initially takes the job because he has insomnia, excess time and no direction in his life. During his 6 p.m. to 6 a.m. shift, he is a voyeur in his rearview mirror to the world of pimps, prostitutes, pushers and addicts who ride in his cab.

He drives in the rundown neighborhoods no other cabbie will travel because he is drawn to the very people he despises. Every night, he cleans out the blood and filth they track into his cab in an effort to somehow rid all of New York of their presence.

During the day, however, he attempts to associate himself with the decent world through Betsy, a presidential campaign volunteer.

Betsy, played amiably by Cybil Shepherd, represents all that Travis wants — companionship and a purpose in life. When Betsy rejects him, he becomes obsessed by her and the thought of killing her boss Charles Palantine. His slogan of "We are the People" drives Travis to believe the senator represents all he despises.

Acquiring enough weaponry to wage a small war and cleansing his body through exercise and self-induced pain becomes Travis's life while he bides his time, waiting to assassinate Palantine.

A chance meeting with a teenage prostitute trying to escape her pimp turns Travis on to the idea of rescuing her and being the vigilante hero.

Jodie Foster, in the role of the prostitute Iris, doesn't like her life of sex and drugs but is powerless to escape it.

All KSU pays for actions of few

THE ISSUE

Some K-State fans have marred the image of the entire University by their unexcusable conduct at athletic events.

WE SUGGEST

The athletic department has responded correctly by establishing a new policy to handle these occurrences.

At 8:35 p.m. CST last Monday night, ESPN announcers Tim Brando and Larry Conley weren't describing the action of the KU-K-State game like they should have been. They were, instead, telling a nationwide audience how Kansas coach Roy Williams was picking up pennies that K-State fans had thrown onto the court. After the game, the camera showed a Kansas player after he was injured by a coin thrown from the crowd.

These were images more embarrassing than K-State's ESPN appearance last semester, when fans rushed the field and tore down a goalpost following a football victory over mighty Iowa State.

Of course, the majority of K-State fans aren't at fault. As usual, the problem springs from a pinheaded minority who can't fathom the consequences of their asinine actions. As it stands, it's a shame the entire student body has to suffer for their bad decisions.

And suffer we do. On area sports programs, few people spoke about the impressive play of the Wildcats. Instead, the topic centered on the lack of class shown by K-State fans. One of the saddest casualties of the controversy is that the hard work of our athletes gets shoved into the background.

Some may argue that opposing players who taunt the crowd are asking for abuse. If that's true, then we continually demonstrate how we're one notch more infantile by responding as we have.

"It's too bad. Kansas State has come a long way, and their fans are still at that level," said the injured KU player after the game. Unfortunately, what he said is true.

Even the athletic department, which usually takes every opportunity to congratulate fans on their enthusiasm, has had enough. It has implemented a rule severely punishing anyone caught in any action that would endanger the participants.

This decision is long-coming and a welcome move towards bringing some respect back to the fans who enjoy K-State athletics.

The sexuality puzzle

KELLY KLAWONN

Choice.

Being gay, lesbian or bisexual is not a choice. Nobody wakes up one morning and decides to change his or her sexual identity. That does not, however, mean that to be gay, lesbian or bisexual does not involve some degree of choice.

We choose to act rather than repress. We choose to be proud rather than hide. We choose to live lives of honesty toward ourselves rather than conform to the dictates of the homophobic majority. We choose to live in or out of the closet.

How any of us live our lives involves a certain amount of choice and decision making. There seems to be a real fear of owning up to the notion of choice within the gay and lesbian community. More importantly, there is a lack of respect for whatever those choices may be.

Bisexuals have had to fight to be included in the queer community. Parts of the gay and lesbian community seem to think that bisexuality is not an honest expression of a person.

Bisexuals are unwilling to admit to being gay because they will lose the all important heterosexual privilege, or they are really heterosexual and just out to experience different things, the arguments go.

Stereotypes exist because there is some degree of truth, but they do not define each and every person. For a community of people so confined and riddled by stereotypes, it seems ironic we would be so willing to further perpetuate other stereotypes.

Our language, coupled with our need for concrete definitions, doesn't allow for much leeway or interpretation. People want gay or straight. People don't want "I am a bisexual but..." I agree that there is a need for people to have a label and identity because it makes mobilization and identity much easier. What I don't agree with is the need for boundaries or criteria.

Bisexuality is a theory, not a practice. The only way a person can be bisexual is to be with a man and a woman at the same time, which is a whole other column. When a bisexual woman is with a man, she is by definition heterosexual. When that same bisexual woman is with another woman, she is by definition a lesbian. For the bisexual, the identity is determined by the partner. This, however, doesn't mean that the bisexual should not be included in the gay community.

Involvement in the gay community means a person is not willing to accept mandatory heterosexuality as the only means of expression. I believe there needs to be some level of commonality within the gay community, but I don't think it should be to the exclusion of the bisexual population.

When a bisexual is in a heterosexual relationship and maintains the label of bisexual, that person at least shows they do not represent traditional heterosexual arrangements. If a bisexual is in a relationship with someone of the same sex, maintaining the bisexual label allows that person to validate past relationships with partners of the opposite sex.

Some bisexuals argue that everyone is bisexual. "If people weren't so afraid or conditioned..." the argument could begin or end. The bisexual who uses this argument is only turning the tables on a tired old tactic. Just as parts of the gay and lesbian community don't accept the bisexual identity, or parts of the heterosexual community do not accept anything but heterosexuality as an honest expression, the bisexual community is saying that theirs is the only honest and valid expression.

The gay and lesbian community needs to include all sexually oppressed people in the fight against mandatory heterosexuality. Our identities, whatever they may be, should not be so limited or defined. Homophobia and sexual freedom are tough enough battles without the queer community creating further division.

Was it something I said?

RICHARD ANDRADE

Let me point out, right from the start, that I'm not too proud to beg. I'm really not.

That said, allow me to beg with wild abandon.

As new editor of this opinion page, I never thought I'd sit here at my desk, elbows on desk, chin in hands, looking forlornly at a black plastic tray. The tray is barren, empty as some big empty thing, possibly emptier.

The tray should be full, it should be overflowing with letters to me, the editor, telling me what you hate and what you love.

Do I have to incite you? Is that what you want? If it'll help me get letters, I can have the word "penis" in 3-inch-high letters plastered across the top of this page. I can use worse words if you want, if it'll make you really angry and write in.

Becoming a shockmeister was not what I had planned when I took on this venerable forum, but I'm at wit's end.

Every day I stare at my empty letter tray, then I stare at my computer, and then I stare at my letter tray again. Every day I try to figure out how to fill the white space that should be crammed with letters.

Sure, I've got the lifeboat of Toles editorial cartoons to cling to, but even that boat is sinking fast. I can only burrow in the sanctuary of Toles for so long before I find myself choosing between topics such as the recent discovery of penicillin or Lindbergh's transatlantic flight.

I'm kind of insulted, actually. When Cassandra receives more letters than I do, it's like salt in the wound or a sharp stick in the eye. Granted, Cassandra's mission is more noble than mine but still. ...

It's not like there aren't any infuriating events going on — Iraq, Yugoslavia, the Amy Fisher movies, K-State basketball fans. Hell, even Brad Seabourn has returned. How else can I provoke your pens? Photocopy Penthouse Letters on the page?

The bottom line is that your letters provide us a crucial fulcrum by letting us know how you feel. Letters spark debate and discussion, not only in the Collegian newsroom but, more importantly, everywhere on- and off-campus where this newspaper is read. Debate and discussion are perhaps the most integral part of our society. See how everything gets linked together?

So, exercise your hard-won penmanship skills and write a letter to the editor. I'll read them all and do my darndest to get them printed.

Otherwise, I'm plastering genital vocabulary all over this page.

Editor's note: After completing this column, I received three letters. Please disregard any previous threats.

▶ RACISM

Columnist's logic misses the point

Editor,

My immediate response after reading John Hart's column (Jan. 19) can be summed up in 12 words: No. No no no no no no no no no No.

Let me explain. Racism is a moral problem, but it also involves a lack of understanding. Most people don't sit around and say to themselves, "I haven't been immoral in a while, why don't I go out and practice racism?" For one reason or another, they have come to the conclusion that a certain group of people does not deserve the same consideration that another gets.

For example, the Tomahawk Chop. If you ask Chiefs fans, they will tell you that no disrespect is meant by the 'harmless' gesture. "What are all these Indians getting so upset about anyway? It's only a game." But by doing the Tomahawk Chop and belting out that ridiculous attempt at a war song and hanging signs that say "Scalp the Cowboys" or some other nonsense, they trivialize the culture of millions of people.

Yes, Native Americans used tomahawks. Yes, there were war songs. Yes, people got scalped (though often it was Native Americans getting scalped by the European Americans). But there is much more to any culture than what goes on in wartime. Unless people can come to understand that, the fight against the Tomahawk Chop and other "irrelevant" issues must be confronted with the same ferocity as discrimination on the job.

When Christians are generalized as hatemongers out to convert the world through violence and deception, not really interested in bettering the world as much as bettering themselves, the vast majority reject the generalization, often with the aid of one of your columns.

The vast majority of Christians are good people who have no intention of harming others. But intending no harm does not necessarily mean doing no harm. (And I do not mean to imply that Christians are responsible for the Tomahawk Chop, I am just trying to show the inconsistency in Hart's thinking.)

Why can Christians defend their beliefs, while Native Americans are "blowing a peripheral issue out of proportion"? Is it because Christians are the dominant culture, and Native Americans should just learn to understand European Americans, while forgetting their own culture?

Is AIDS a behavioral or racial issue? Yes. I understand that most AIDS patients get the virus through sexual contact or drug use, but that does not mean there is not a racial dimension to the problem. I have not read the national commission's report, but I would guess they concluded that African Americans and Hispanics are at greater risk because of their environment. Ethnic minorities are far more likely to live in poverty, and people in poverty are more likely to engage in high-risk behavior.

Poverty is undeniably a racial issue, as the dominant culture in America has long tried to keep others poor. It is also likely that report found that race has something to do with the fact that the government has done so little to solve the AIDS problem. When a group of people makes up an incredibly disproportionate number of victims in any circumstance, it must at least be investigated as a racial issue.

Racism does not reside in the heart, it resides in the mind. Whether it is the Klansman who fire-bombs churches, or the columnist who thinks that if those African Americans and Hispanics would just stop sleeping around and shooting up then maybe they wouldn't get AIDS, the mind of the racist has been programmed to think that. Maybe by racist parents, but most often the culprit is the dominant culture itself.

I'll admit that I say and do things that probably offend other people, but I try to stop when it is brought to my attention. And because I was brought up in the dominant culture, I don't know everything about my Native American heritage.

Only by learning about other cultures and trying to understand their point of view on things can the attitudes be changed. I don't expect everyone to go out and visit their local Native American reservation, but asking Native Americans why they find the Tomahawk offensive is a good start.

▶ KSU-KU GAME

Act like an idiot and you're outta there

Editor,

Prompted by fan behavior prior to and following the Kansas State basketball game against Kansas on Monday night, the Kansas State Athletic Department has recognized the need to take action against improper fan behavior at athletic events held in Bramlage Coliseum.

Those choosing to act in a manner that could result in harm to participants, such as throwing objects onto the playing floor, will be immediately ejected from the game and not permitted to attend games for the remainder of the season.

At Kansas State, we pride ourselves on good sportsmanship. We are appalled that any fan would jeopardize the health and safety of a participant in an athletic event by throwing objects.

Please consider the consequences of behavior such as that mentioned above. This is the second-consecutive year in which a Kansas basketball player has sustained an injury due to an object being thrown from the stands in Bramlage Coliseum. This behavior will not be tolerated in any way and reflects poorly on Kansas State University as a whole.

Fans' behavior once again tarnishes KSU

Editor,

What a game. The Wildcats played great, and the Bramlage crowd was loud. Why must a few people mess the whole thing up? Always cheer for the home squad, but why cheer when the opponents are hurt on the floor (Richard Scott). I'd like to talk (to put it nicely) to the idiot who threw the coin at Rex Walters. That shows a lot of class and great school spirit.

Our team showed that it is a good one, and deserving of an impressive, 10-3 record. It was a great chance to show how good KSU really is. Too bad we gave ESPN and the nation a reason to talk about something other than our good basketball team and our University.

I tip my hat off to our players, and my apologies to KU for a few persons' actions.

Workers plow into salt removal

WADE SISSON
Collegian

A large accumulation of snow and ice has meant overtime for workers in Manhattan and on the K-State campus.

"This has been an unusual winter so far," Ed Rice, assistant vice president for facilities, said. "We've had people working for the past two weekends."

Rice said the Division of Facilities has used 50 workers in the removal, utilizing brooms, blades, plows and three-wheeled scooters.

The main concern now is to clean up the salt, Rice said.

"The ice melt mixture gets tracked into buildings and damages the wood, the tile floors and the carpeting," Rice said. "We try to clean it up as soon as possible."

Jerry Lane, director of facilities services, said $30,000 has been spent by his department so far this year, and 250 hours of overtime have been reported.

"We're not in any kind of emergency situation, but the supply of salt has been depleted to the point that we are ordering more," Lane said.

Lane's department handles sidewalks and bike paths on campus.

Facilities maintenance, which oversees campus streets, has had eight people working on the using a plow truck, sand-spreader, road-grater and tractors, Randy Slover, director, said.

Slover said his department has spent $16,060 this year. He said 30 tons of ice melt and 200 tons of sand have been used in the removal process.

The city public works department has spent between $12,000 and $13,000 on snow removal so far, Chuck Williams, assistant public works director, said.

The work involved 20 to 25 workers, who have worked 550 hours of overtime. Seven dump trucks, two motor graters, a back-hoe, a loader with a snow blower, and a skid-steer motor have been used in the removal, Williams said.

While the city public works department has a sufficient supply of salt and sand, Williams said the Independent Salt Company in Kanapolis, Kan., has a backlog and is currently not taking orders.

The public works department has used 400 tons of salt and nearly 1,000 cubic yards of sand since Jan. 1, Williams said.

"We really haven't had a major storm like this since 1986," Williams said. "Last year we didn't use that much over the whole winter, but we have enough salt in storage to fight two more of these storms."

Serbs meet to consider proposal

Debate bitter as factions sort out plan to bring peace to war-ravaged republic

ASSOCIATED PRESS

PALE, Bosnia-Herzegovina — A self-proclaimed parliament of Bosnian Serbs met Tuesday to consider trading land and the right to their own borders for an end to Bosnia's bloody civil war.

Bosnia's Muslim and Croat factions have accepted the proposal by international mediators.

Rejection by the Serbs could doom peace talks and lead to foreign military intervention in a conflict that has killed at least 17,000 people.

Seventy-one of the assembly's 81 members opened the plenary session with the old Serbian national anthem, "God of Justice" and a moment of silence for dead comrades.

Debate was bitter at the session in Pale, 12 miles east of Sarajevo.

Forty-nine deputies signaled their intention to speak, and after about four hours of discussion, only 18 had taken the floor.

The proposal by mediators Cyrus Vance of the United Nations and Lord Owen of the European Community would divide the former Yugoslav republic into 10 autonomous provinces.

Bosnian Serb leader Radovan Karadzic accepted the plan a week ago in Geneva on the condition that the Bosnian Serb assembly approve it.

"On the one hand, the international community is rattling its sabers," he said in his opening address. "On the other hand, it has made possible a political solution of the crisis. That is why the Geneva conference represents the only hope for the war to end."

Karadzic has said he will resign if the plan is rejected. He predicted the vote would be "very tight."

The draft includes boundaries drawn partly along ethnic lines and nine constitutional principles. It would mean the Serbs would have to give up their demand for a separate state within Bosnia and an eventual merger with neighboring, Serb-dominated Yugoslavia.

The international community has warned Serbs to accept unconditionally or risk military intervention.

But even if they accept, an agreement to halt the fighting would not be assured.

Karadzic contended Tuesday that the provincial borders were subject to negotiation.

Talks in Geneva could resume by Thursday if the Serbs approve the plan. Vance and Owen were to travel Wednesday to Sarajevo, but whether they would meet with Serb leaders was unclear.

Some Serb officials said they might insist on three separate ethnic states, which Geneva negotiators and the Muslims have rejected.

"If the assembly says 'yes,' that will mean that the Serbs in Bosnia will not have their state, and that was the reason why this war was fought," said Biljana Plavsic, one of Karadzic's two vice presidents.

Assembly speaker Momcilo Krajisnik, warned, "We are now deciding between bad and worse, and either decision will have negative consequences for Serbs."

Bosnia's Serb minority, backed initially by the Serb-dominated Yugoslav army, rebelled after the Muslim and Croat majority voted for independence last February.

Serbs made up one-third of Bosnia's prewar population of 4.3 million, but have seized 70 percent of its territory.

Neighboring Yugoslavia, now composed of only Serbia and Montenegro, is under heavy U.N. economic sanctions for provoking the conflict and supporting the Serb fighters.

Bosnian delegates arriving in Pale, the Serbs' political and military headquarters in Bosnia, were greeted by banners reading, "Peace Through Agreement."

But as they met, fighting continued across much of Bosnia, including Sarajevo.

More shelling Tuesday hit the old town district of the Bosnian capital, under siege by Serb forces throughout the war.

Red Cross lifts ban from blood donations

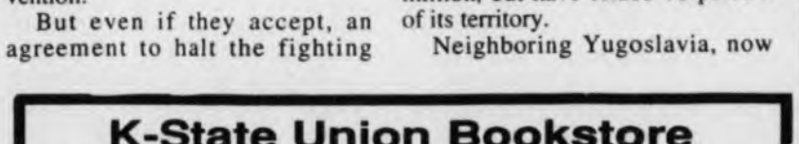
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The American Red Cross has lifted a ban that prevented anyone who served in the Persian Gulf War from donating blood.

The Red Cross had instituted the ban to prevent transmission of a parasitic infection caused by sandfly bites received in the gulf.

A Department of Defense study indicates there is no longer a danger from the parasite.

Richard Bowles, assistant station manager of the Red Cross at Fort Riley, said this should increase the blood supply received at Fort Riley.



"Of course it makes a difference for us because we had a number of people serve in the Persian Gulf War," Bowles said. "We should see a significant increase during our next blood drive.

Matt Seligman, freshman in business administration and veteran of the gulf war, said the lifting of the ban is the proper action for the Red Cross.

The names are too numerous to list, but to all of you who helped us out we send our deepest appreciation. We could not have done it without you.

Beane Ball ignites Wildcats to 10-3 start

SHANE KEYSER/Collegian

Anthony Beane, Cat guard, lunges for a loose ball in Monday night's 71-65 loss to the Jayhawks. Beane's aggressive style of play has been a constant all year.

"He's meant a great deal to our basketball program."
DANA ALTMAN
K-State coach

STEVEN ROCK
Collegian

One of the primary preseason concerns for the Wildcat basketball team was whether or not somebody would step up and fill the role vacated by last season's point guard Marcus Zeigler.

Junior transfer Anthony Beane has done just that.

Beane's strong work ethic — and a continued penchant to sink the late-game bucket — has him tabbed as one of the team's dominant players.

"Anthony Beane's biggest contribution to this basketball team, you guys don't get to see," Cat coach Dana Altman said. "It's at practice everyday. Anthony comes to practice every day and works very hard.

"He's helped our basketball team in that regard because everybody watches him. His actions have picked up our practices, and he's meant a great deal to our basketball program with his work ethic."

"We were hoping he would provide that, and he really has."

At the midway point of the season for the 10-3 Cats, Beane has done all the things that Zeigler did — and more.

Not only can Beane break down a full-court press, but he also offers K-State a scoring threat that Zeigler couldn't.

True, Beane already has more turnovers than Zeigler had all season (42-36), but most of those have come when Beane was driving the lane — something that Zeigler rarely did.

The result? Beane has also scored more points than Zeigler did last season — 121-107.

Beane is averaging 9.3 points a game. A year ago, Zeigler scored just more than four points a game. And Beane has connected on 41 percent of his treys, dwarfing Zeigler's 27.5 percent and ranking him second only to Brian Henson.

Beane's late-game heroics have become nearly as routine as his shoestring-high dribbles and the wrist band wrapped halfway up his left arm.

■ Against Ohio, Beane made a steal at midcourt with 30 seconds to play in regulation that led to Deryl Cunningham's game-tying layup. K-State eventually won in overtime, 73-72.

■ At Cal-Santa Barbara, Beane drilled a 19-foot jumper with eight seconds to play that gave the Cats a 60-59 win.

■ Again on the road, Beane sent the game with Oklahoma State into overtime by sinking a 24-foot trey with eight seconds left in regulation. Again, K-State prevailed.

But a penchant for late-game heroism isn't new to Beane. He hit a game-winning, buzzer-beating basket to lead Three Rivers Junior College to the NJCAA Championship last year.

"I like to play under pressure," Beane said.

And being dubbed a big-play man doesn't bother him.

"I like the label," he said. "That's just the way it goes sometimes. People say that to me, and I laugh and smile."

And his teammates have noticed his leadership.

"I just think he's a winner," forward Ron Lucas said. "When he's in a position like that, he's at his best. That's a winner."

Beane is leading the team in assists with 5.3 per game — second in the conference behind only Oklahoma's Terry Evans. His nine-assist effort Monday night against the Jayhawks was a career high and moved him past Adonis Jordan in the Big Eight this season.

Jordan, who entered the game with 483 career assists, was held — by Beane — to just one.

And that game proved to Beane that he has successfully made the transition to Division I ball.

"It let me know that I can play with any of those guys," he said. "And it showed me that we're just as good as anybody else."

Beane said he's excited about playing Kansas two more times this season — once in Lawrence and once at the Big Eight Tournament championship game.

"That's if they make it."

Hey, hunters, put away the fishing poles

If you're finding hunting a little difficult lately, you're not alone. High hunting pressure and severe weather seem to have taken a toll on the upland bird population in Kansas. Many hunters are getting discouraged and starting to get out their fishing poles.

Put them away — there are plenty of birds left.

All you have to do is drive 25 minutes out of Manhattan to experience first-class upland birding at the Red Rock Game Farm just outside Wamego.

You can shoot pheasant, quail or chukar. You make the call. The hunt will be tailored to your needs, and Lynn Pugh will make sure of that.

Pugh is the owner of Red Rock and goes out of his way to make sure you are having a good time.

He personally guides his guests through the preserve, pointing out the hot spots.

If you have your own dog, you may use it. If you don't, you can rent Pugh's labs, Babe and Hershey.

Babe is probably the finest pointing lab I've ever hunted with. It's almost worth the trip just to watch a lab lock up on a quail with a point unmatched by many Brits.

RON LACKEY

If you desire, you may rent a couple of Brittanys from local hunters who will assist you in the field.

If you don't have birds planted for you, there is a good population of wild birds that may be hunted. The wild birds come to feed on the food plots that Pugh has planted all around the preserve.

Whether you shoot wild birds or have them planted for you, the charge is still the same.

Pheasants are $12.50, chukar are $9.50 and quail are $5.50 per bird. These are the lowest preserve prices in the area, and there is no cover charge to hunt at Red Rock.

You pay only for what you shoot, nothing else.

You may purchase a video of your hunt. This, as I found out, is a double-edged sword. If you make some great shots, you will gladly purchase the tape and take it home.

But if you make some terrible shots, your hunting buddy will gladly purchase the tape and make sure everybody in the Western Hemisphere sees it.

At the end of the day, Pugh will dress the birds for a small fee.

You manly men may shun this service, but at the end of a long day, I'd rather stand around Pugh's wood-burning stove and drink a cool one than dress birds.

If you have a bird dog that you are training, there probably isn't a better place to do it. First, you know there are birds. Secondly,Pugh will teach you how and where to plant birds.

This is a dog trainer's dream once you learn how to do it.

The spring turkey season is just around the corner, and Red Rock will offer six Toms for shotgunning.

And one lucky fella will bag a two-bearded tom estimated to be around 30 pounds.

For the elderly or handicapped, this is an excellent setup. You can be taken directly to your blind, the bird will be released in your area and either you or your caller will lure the bird in for a shot. Included in this package is a free video of your hunt.

When the weather improves, construction will begin on a six-station sporting clay range.

Pugh is aiming at a family-type of atmosphere in which everybody will be able to enjoy the clays.

In February, Red Rock will host a two-man, two-dog, hunting competition. Two hunters will be sent to the field with two dogs, 12 shells, and one hour to shoot birds.

Last year's winner walked away with a new shotgun.

Take advantage of this first-class preserve that offers many services for the outdoorsman.

Give Pugh a call sometime and set up an appointment to enter the two-man competition for February (913) 456-7664.

Skaters pummel Wichita all-stars

STEVEN ROCK
Collegian

A weekend trip to Wichita was more than just a chance for the K-State hockey team to watch the Wichita Thunder play the Tulsa Oilers at the Kansas Coliseum. It was a chance to play a Wichita all-star team just prior to a professional Central Hockey League game.

And beat them 13-1.

The Wildcat skaters played their first game of the spring semester Saturday night against a team of Wichita all-stars. And,the decisive 12-point win gave Jake Kisel, team president, reason to look forward to the semester.

"We looked really good," he said. "We looked like we had been skating together forever."

Not quite. But the team had been practicing every night at the "ice cube," a small ice skating rink at Manhattan's City Park. Kisel estimated that it is 1/8 the size of a full-size hockey rink.

"It's a really sad place," he said. "We developed some bad habits on that little ice. But we did manage to get our skates under our feet, and we got the sweat going."

The victory in Wichita, in which 10 different players scored, was just the start of a long spring season for K-State. Included in that list of upcoming games is a tournament in Fort Lauderdale during spring break and a trip to Montreal during the Memorial Day weekend.

"It's a good way to get our feet wet," Kisel said. "It was nice to come back and take it to this other team. We just beat the hell out of them."

The Wildcat goalies, Bill Hudson and Steve Kaploe, held Wichita to just the single tally. And for Hudson, it was a going away party of sorts. Just three days after the game, he moved back home to Alaska.

Forward Scott Thorne led the team with three goals.

K-State is in the Southern Division of the Central States Collegiate Hockey League. The Cats have a 3-4 record and are currently in sixth place of a six-team division.

The Wildcats travel to the University of Missouri-St. Louis next weekend to play a pair of weekend games.

▶MARYLAND UPSETS OKLAHOMA

BALTIMORE (AP) — Maryland shut down No. 12 Oklahoma's high-powered offense and Evers Burns scored 22 points as the Terrapins halted a four-game losing streak with an 89-78 victory Tuesday night.

Maryland, 9-5, never trailed after limiting OU to 31 points in the first half. The Sooners, now 12-4, came in with a nation-best 97.7 points per game average. They shot 35 percent.

Half of Oklahoma's losses have come against Atlantic Coast Conference foes. Two weeks ago, Duke beat the Sooners in overtime.

Kevin McLinton scored 20 points for the Terrapins, who had lost their previous four games by an average of 18 points. Jeff Webster led Oklahoma with 20 points and Bryan Sallier had 16 points.

Credit payments are taxing burdens

BRETT KELLY
Collegian

Chris Munoz, senior in criminal justice, said he has four credit cards and owes a total of about $3,000. Every month he pays about $150 and plans to pay off his debt when he gets a job as a police officer.

William Griffin, Miami representative for Ford Motor Credit, said "Munoz has established good credit and will probably qualify for loans after graduation."

Not all students are like Munoz. In fact, many have already jeopardized or even ruined their credit rating.

Daniel Broze, sophomore in political science, recently transferred to K-State from Broward Community College in Florida. He said the bill collectors tracked him down.

"When I got into town, my first call was from a bill collector," he said. "I don't know how they got my new number, but they found me."

Broze said he has five credit cards that have been past due on and off for the last three years.

"Since I came to K-State, my father has been paying off my credit cards, which is about $4,000 worth," he said.

Broze said he just got a Discover card in the mail, which he will use to try and get a Dillard's card.

"I want to establish good credit again. It took a long time, but I've learned my lesson," he said. "It's not like it used to be. When I was fourteen, I was a member of one of those music clubs. I never paid and they just gave up."

One student, a fourth-year sophomore, said he is so embarrassed about his credit that he asked to remain anonymous.

He said collection letters from music and book clubs come in the mail almost daily. His delinquent accounts have gotten so severe that one of the letters said, "Sometimes, we just can't seem to find the right combination of words to get people to pay."

He said his Visa card has already reached the $500 limit.

"I've charged more than six hundred. So, my bill always has a $25 over-the-limit charge in addition to late fees," he said. "I really don't know how I could have put that much on it. I think it was chips and cigarettes."

The card was canceled because of his delinquency, he said.

He recently paid off his credit card debt, along with last term's deferred tuition and a past due emergency student loan, he said. He did not get the money from work or his parents. He got a $3,000 Stafford loan.

"I have about $10,000 in student loans now. I want to complete my master's degree. So, I'm thinking I'll have about $20,000 in loans to pay off," he said.

"But, I might be able to file for bankruptcy. This might be considered an abuse of the system."

Whether or not his actions are an abuse of the system is a matter of opinion.

"A bankruptcy or student loan default will ruin a person's credit," William Griffin, representative from Ford Motor credit, said. "That's a fact. Ford Credit receives credit information about customers from a company called Credit Bureau Institute."

"On the report we receive, there is information about an applicant's employment, pay history and other personal information," Griffin said.

"If there is a student loan default or a bankruptcy, the person applying for the loan will almost always be turned down," he said. "If the applicant has some bad credit, but not too much, they might be approved, but their interest rate will be higher."

Griffin said the most common problem with students who apply for a loan is that they are over-extended. He said people shouldn't owe more than 50 percent of their monthly income to creditors.

Tanis Edwards, finance manager at Dick Edwards Ford, said it's good for students to establish credit, as long as they don't get too many credit cards that will end up costing more than the student can afford.

Edwards said most of the students that apply for loans with her company are seniors who have already found jobs and understand their own financial responsibilities.

New book gives surprise to speech department

DIANE HUTCHISON
Collegian

While flipping through a book at a bookstore, Harold Nichols, head of speech department, said he happened to see four K-State performing arts programs nationally ranked in the Performing Arts Major's College Guide.

"Both of the theater's undergraduate and graduate programs and the dance program were recommended," Nichols said.

"Two of the programs listed that will be a surprise, which people really don't know about, will be the dance and music theater programs," Luke Kahlich, professor of dance and theater, said. "Just that we have them will be a surprise."

K-State's music theater program was ranked among the 39 most highly recommended programs in the nation.

The book was put together by Carole Everett, the admissions director at the Julliard School of New York. Nichols said the list of performing arts curricula at different schools was made up of information from questionnaires and interviews.

"That was really a factual survey," Nichols said, who received one in 1991. "It concerned general facts such as the number of students enrolled and the different kinds of programs at the school."

The form was almost forgotten.

"I think Harold had forgotten about the form," Lew Shelton, director of theater, said. "Particularly a surprise was the fact that all of our programs were listed."

Nichols said there were not many questions in the survey to really tell how good the programs were.

"This is the first edition of the book, so I don't know whether it will be annual or if it will just be put out every couple of years," Nichols said.

The book is meant to help teachers, parents and students choose among the different programs at both private and public schools.

"I don't know how thorough the research was, but to me it doesn't look like all the programs of every school were listed," Shelton said.

Two other Kansas schools had performing arts programs ranked in the guide. The University of Kansas and Wichita State University both had three programs listed.

"I suspect it will cause a lot of schools to look at their programs and see how they can get listed," Shelton said.

Nichols said the publicity is a welcome surprise. He said he did not know if it would affect enrollment in K-State's performing arts programs.

"It's hard to tell. This book is part of the ARCO college guides that come out through Prentice Hall, so they have a fairly wide circulation," Nichols said.

"It probably will not, although it might have some effect once it's more widely read," Nichols said. "Then it might aid us in recruiting new students into the programs."

Shelton also said he thought the publicity would help bring in more students.

"I think it will probably mean more out-of-state interest," Shelton said. "Particularly when they see how low the tuition is, they might take a good look at K-State."

Film shows dark side of New York

Travis drives through dark, intimidating streets where fire hydrants are constantly being jimmied open by children up way past a normal bedtime. He watches them as his windshield wipers clear his view and mutters, "Someday, a real rain will come and wash this scum off the streets."

That, in itself, becomes the ensuing theme of the movie.

Robert DeNiro turns in a gripping and rather scarily convincing performance of a psychotic cabbie driven to violence. Young Jodie Foster's portrayal of an unmarred, innocent girl doing very grownup, dirty things is telling of her award-winning career to come.

Under the direction of Martin Scorsese the film takes on a gritty, hazy texture and transplants the viewer into the world of a lonesome soul looking for a handhold on reality. It is depressing, yet interesting, in its depiction of life as seen through a grimy cab window.

Saddam's troops as well as missile sites and other military installations.

Some advisers privately expressed relief at the prospect of a cooling-off period and an inauguration day free of military action.

But publicly, Clinton aides would not offer any praise of Saddam's announcement.

Instead, they chose to note Iraq was still not in compliance with U.N. demands for its inspectors to have full access to suspected Iraqi military installations. They were openly skeptical of Saddam's commitment to honor the no-fly zones that he has insisted have violated Iraq's sovereignty.

"There should be no perceived opening of the door" to improved relations, said Clinton press secretary Dee Dee Myers.

Stephanopoulos voiced the Clinton camp's skepticism.

"It's almost impossible to imagine how we're going to get to this situation, given Saddam's history," he said. "We have not had compliance with U.N. resolutions. We've seen, actually, a flaunting of the U.N. resolution. And there's nothing in his behavior and his actions to suggest that that's going to change."

'Gay and Confused' not alone in his situation

DEAR CASSANDRA,

I know exactly where "Gay and Confused" is at in his life right now because I am in almost exactly the same situation. The only difference is that I broke up with my girlfriend right before Christmas. She doesn't know the real reason. I couldn't tell her. The problem now is that on top of all the confusion, hurt, etc. there is loneliness. The thing that has helped me the most is that I have found a few gay friends who I can trust and be myself around. I have to keep reminding myself that being gay really isn't a choice, it's the way I am.

I guess my whole point is that 99 percent of my friends are "straight" and none of them know about me. "Gay and Confused" seems to be in the same boat. I would really like to meet him, but since your column is anonymous, I really don't know how to go about it. I am giving you my address. Please, don't print it, but if "Gay and Confused" contacts you, you have my permission to give it to him.

Thanks,
Confused Too

DEAR TOO,

I'm sure there are many other gay and confused folks who didn't write in but can relate to these letters. Thanks for sharing your story.

But as one reader mentioned in a letter the other day, this isn't the Love Connection. I can't assume the responsibility or liability of introducing the writers of anonymous letters to one another. It's just too dangerous. Sorry.

Perhaps a discrete personal ad in the Collegian would do the trick.

DEAR CASSANDRA,

I have two brothers — one went to the University of Kansas, and the other was sent to the electric chair for murder. My mother died in an insane asylum when I was seven years old. My father is a hardened narcotics pusher. One of my sisters is a successful and highly respected prostitute, and the other is a common-law wife of an executive of the American Nazi Party.

Recently, I met a girl shortly after she was released from prison where she had served time for smothering her illegitimate baby. We are very much in love and expect to be married. My problem is this — should I tell her about my brother who attended KU?

Sincerely,
Troubled at K-State

DEAR TROUBLED,

Ha ha ha. I doubt this will help soften the blow of losing to the 'Hawks Monday night, but I printed it anyway.

Maybe you should think about getting cable — you have entirely too much time on your hands. Sending sick letters to advice columnists is no way to live.

Letters to Cassandra may be submitted in person or by mail to the Kansas State Collegian, c/o Cassandra Duveaux, Kedzie Hall 106, Manhattan, KS 66506.

J.C. jogger's death sparks inquisition

ASSOCIATED PRESS

JUNCTION CITY, Kan. (AP) — A judicial inquisition could begin next week to investigate the death of a jogger who was shot last month near his rural Geary County home, County Attorney Chris Biggs said Tuesday.

Randall R. Sheridan, 41, of Junction City died of multiple gunshot wounds Dec. 22. His body was found by a meter reader shortly after the shooting.

The inquisition will be closed to the public. An inquisition gives officials subpoena power to require people to appear and provide information about a crime.

Under Kansas law, the inquisition testimony and evidence could form the basis for filing charges.

Local law authorities, assisted by the Kansas Bureau of Investigation and FBI, have been conducting an intensive investigation into the homicide. There have been no arrests.

Sheridan, a truck driver, was shot near old U.S. 77, about 4 miles southwest of Junction City. The site was less than a mile from his home.

In a related matter, a man and a woman from Salina have been arrested on suspicion of perjuring themselves during the investigation. They were expected to make initial appearances today in Saline County District Court.

Agriculture offices targeted to close

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — Six Agriculture Department field offices in Kansas were recommended for closing Tuesday as part of a nationwide restructuring of the agency.

Agriculture Secretary Edward Madigan announced the proposed closings and said it would be left to Congress and the Clinton administration to carry out his plan or change it further.

Earlier this month, the department had targeted nine offices in Kansas for possible closure. But three of those would remain open under Madigan's final plan. In addition, the secretary proposed opening one new field office in southwest Kansas.

Madigan said it could take several years to fully implement the closings if they are accepted by the Clinton administration and Congress. The department has said it hoped to make staff cuts by attrition rather than firing workers.

Here is the list of proposed closings in Kansas, according to the department:

Agricultural Stabilization and Conservation Service

■ Elk County office in Howard and Geary County office in Junction City.

The Johnson County office in Olathe, which had been on the preliminary closing list, would remain open.

Farmers Home Administration

■ Graham County office in Hill City, Hamilton County office in Syracuse, Mitchell County office in Beloit and Stevens County office in Hugoton.

The Cloud County office in Concordia, which had been on the preliminary closing list, would remain open.

The department proposed opening a Grant County FmHA field office in Ulysses to better provide service in the area.

The department said it wouldn't close any Soil Conservation Service offices in Kansas. It previously had targeted the Geary County office in Junction City for closure.

USDA has said it targeted offices for closing because of a combination of factors, including the number of farmers and size of region served as well as overhead costs. In some instances, several USDA agencies have offices in the same building.

Incoming Agriculture Secretary Mike Espy, who is awaiting Senate confirmation, said last week he supported restructuring and would immediately look at the plan developed by Madigan once he assumes office.

Some members of Congress, including Kansans, had criticized Madigan's draft consolidation plan because it focused only on field offices and not the headquarters staff.

But Madigan's final recommendations included a consolidation of the department's headquarters in Washington to reduce the number of operating agencies from 26 to 13.

Rep. Dan Glickman, a Wichita Democrat who had objected to the draft proposals, said he had not studied the details of Madigan's final recommendations, but that "it sounds like what he is trying to do is modernize the operations of the department.

"The department is in desperate need of reinvigorating and modernizing at the top," he said.

First U.S. troops return from Somalia

U.N. to command troops in near future, resolution still on table

ASSOCIATED PRESS

MOGADISHU, Somalia — The first American combat troops flew home from Somalia on Tuesday with excitement, relief and a feeling that they brought some stability to this far-off ravaged land.

The chief U.S. military spokesman, Marine Col. Fred Peck, said he did not know when more of the 24,715 American troops would be withdrawn.

The United States has been frustrated in its efforts to transfer military control of Somalia to a U.N. command because the Security Council has not yet acted on a required resolution. The top U.N. envoy to Somalia, Ismat Kittani of Iraq, indicated Monday that the U.S. deadline of Feb. 1 would not likely be met.

The 556 Marines who left for Camp Pendleton, Calif., were jubilant as they departed, many of them cheering loudly, happy to be out of harm's way and the heat, disease and dust of Somalia. More than 500 troops were scheduled to leave Wednesday, reducing Marine strength to less than 9,000.

Another spokesman, Army Lt. Col. Steve Ritter, told the daily briefing that U.S. strength had probably reached its peak in numbers, but about 430 support troops, mostly from the Army, will be arriving as part of the logistics task force. The United States reportedly will provide logistics support to the U.N. command once it is set up.

The Marines are providing security for aid workers and are trying to break through the famine, disease, lawlessness and civil war that have taken 350,000 Somali lives in the past year.

"I'm excited to be leaving Somalia," said 1st Lt. Anne Christenson, 25, of Vancouver, Wash., looking forward to a reunion with her husband, who is in the Navy. "It's a pretty hard place to be living in — the heat, the dirt, being shot at. I've only been here for five weeks. It seems like a year, though."

Christenson, an intelligence officer who tracked Somali gangs and bandits, said Mogadishu is much more secure than when the first Marines arrived Dec. 9.

"Some of the schools have started up again," she said. "Some of the police forces have started taking control of the city. They're trying to take the city back from the gangs and bandits."

"I'm feeling real good now," said Lance Cpl. Brandon Stevens, 21, of Blue Earth, Minn. "I think we did them a lot of good. We helped them out a lot, got the food to the places where it needed to be."

"We've accomplished so much here," said Lt. Col. Jim Walsh, 46, of San Francisco, commander of the 3rd Battalion, 9th Marine Regiment, the first combat unit to leave.

"When we arrived, this country was on its back, and since we've been here, we've gotten it back up on its feet," Walsh said. "It's a real pleasure to see all the food flowing in, kids going back to school, the towns fairly stable again. The elders in the towns are starting to form a government again on their own."

Even as the battalion was leaving, other Marines providing security for relief workers in the countryside came under sniper fire, but there were no casualties. Two Somalis were captured and turned over to local authorities.

Since American forces arrived in Somalia, one Marine has been killed and one Marine and one Navy corpsman wounded.

As the first American troops departed, representatives of Mogadishu's two major warlords, Ali Mahdi Mohamed and Mohamed Farrah Aidid, tore down the barricades along the capital's embattled Green Line in a symbolic gesture of reconciliation.

The two warlords were among the leaders of 14 factions who signed a cease-fire last week in Addis Ababa, Ethiopia.

INAUGURATION '93

Clinton asks America to befriend change

SHAWN BRUCE AND BRYAN LARSON
Collegian

WASHINGTON — As the helicopter carrying private citizen George Bush departed, William Jefferson Clinton began celebrating the first hours of his presidency Wednesday afternoon.

A crowd of more than 300,000 stretching from the west Capitol steps to the Washington Monument had just finished witnessing the peaceful transfer of power which was a part of the 42nd Presidential Inauguration.

With family and friends looking on, Clinton was administered the Presidential Oath of Office by Supreme Court Chief Justice William Rehnquist. The crowd exploded into applause as Clinton promised to uphold the Constitution of the United States, "So help me God."

Wendell Ford, D-Ken., chairman of the Joint Congressional Committee on Inaugural Ceremonies, prepared the crowd for Clinton's inaugural speech.

"We're getting ready to do it now," Ford said before re-introducing Clinton to the crowd as President.

Clinton then took the microphone. After saluting Bush and thanking him for his 50 years of public service, Clinton used his speech to reiterate many of the themes he stressed during his campaign, evoking memories of John Kennedy.

"We must make change our friend and not our enemy," he said. "We need a government for tomorrow and not yesterday"

To do that will require some pain, Clinton said.

"We must invest in our people and cut our massive debt. It will not be easy. The American people must be willing to sacrifice," he said. "But it can be done and can be done fairly."

Clinton stressed that even though changes need to be made, the United States is still full of opportunities.

"There is nothing wrong with America that cannot be cured by what is right with America. Our challenges are fearsome, but so are our strengths," Clinton said.

One of the major keys to success will be keeping young people involved in the decisions being made, Clinton said. He challenged all youth to serve their community and challenged older people to remember that they borrow America from the generation that follows.

The newly inaugurated President also urged Congress to join with him in getting away from what he labeled a "who's in, who's out" syndrome, which he said plagues them all.

"In this city today, there are people who want to do better," Clinton said. "Let us put aside personal advantage so we can

Locals celebrate changing of guard

Big band music was playing. Democrats were dancing.

Celebration and fulfillment abounded at the Little Apple Inaugural Ball at Wareham Opera House Wednesday night.

The Riley County Democratic Party and Young Democrats of America collaborated in their efforts to organize the ball.

Despite bad weather and Kansas being written off as a Republican state, there was a large turnout at the ball, about 200 people.

"It is an incredible celebration of Democracy," said Ray Kowalczewski, senior in economics and political science and also the president of K-State's Young Democrats of America. "It is a celebration well deserved."

Local Democrats were asked to donate campaign memorabilia to a silent auction given at the inaugural ball. The items included engraved invitations to the inaugural ceremony in Washington D.C., newspapers that reported on the campaign, buttons, posters and balloons.

Changes increase financial aid availability

MARK JONES
Collegian

Changes in federal financial aid programs will make applying for aid easier and will make loans available to all students, said Larry Moeder, director of Student Financial Assistance.

One of the most noticeable changes will be a new application used to apply for federal financial aid.

Last fall, Congress mandated a standard form, the Free Application for Federal Student Aid form, to be used by everyone applying for financial aid. This new form will replace the Family Financial Statement previously used.

"The new form is four pages, fill in the blank, with no bubbles to fill in. I think the tendency for errors will be reduced," Moeder said.

Another change is that any student is now eligible to receive some type of financial assistance, regardless of income, Moeder said.

This is partially due to the creation of the Federal Unsubsidized Stafford Loan.

This loan is identical to the Federal Subsidized Stafford Loan, except the borrowers, rather than the government, will pay interest on the loan while the student is in school.

With the new Unsubsidized Stafford Loan, students are eligible for the equivalent Subsidized Stafford Loan allowance for their year in school minus any other financial aid received.

PLUS loans, which are parent loans for undergraduate students, have also seen changes. In the past, parents were limited to borrowing $4,000 per student per year.

Now, parents may borrow up to the full cost of education minus other financial aid received by the student, Moeder said.

Students who are classified independent now may not be next year, he said.

In the past, students with resources of $4,000 or more and who were not claimed on their parents income tax could be classified as independent.

Next year to be classified as independent, a student must meet one of seven criteria: be over 24, a veteran, married, a graduate or professional student, an orphan, ward of the court or have legal dependents of his own.

The new classification standards will change about 450 K-State students from independent to dependent status.

The new federal financial aid laws also have changes in figuring a student's and family's financial resources, Moeder said. Home equity values are removed, allowable income will raise $10,000 and farm equity values for families living on farms have been removed.

"This will help us from small farms. We are limited in our ability to generate income, but in the past were forced to show a large net worth when applying for financial aid," junior in agribusiness Lyle Wedel said.

Applications for federal and state financial aid are available at the Office of Student Financial Assistance.

"Every student and parent should be able to receive enough assistance to finance the total cost of the student's education," Moeder said.

The most important thing when applying for aid is to meet the priority deadline of March 15 for federal and state aid programs, he said.

Deans update University on multicultural goals

WENDY BARRETT
Collegian

A crowd of about 40 people listened as college deans read updates Wednesday on K-State's multicultural goals and aspirations.

Dean of the College of Architecture and Design Lane Marshall said a minority exchange program has been discussed with President Jon Wefald and is scheduled to be instated in fall 1993.

K-State has plans to exchange with Howard University, a primarily African-American school in Washington, D.C., Marshall said. Using a one-month exchange program, minority faculty from other colleges would come to K-State, while a white K-State faculty member would travel to their college.

Other multicultural programs were discussed, most of which focused on helping students get the extra educational help they need. Tutoring programs, study skills courses and peer counseling have been set up for minority students in all the colleges.

"We have put a lot of time into our minority program," Dean of the College of Engineering Donald Rathbone said.

Rathbone stressed the importance of the Minority Engineering Center, which has been in existence for almost 20 years.

The deans discussed their desire to have more minority students and faculty at K-State. They each noted, however, the difficulty in obtaining multicultural staff and students.

Michael Holen, dean of the College of Education, gave the audience a list of numbers reflecting minority growth in that college. He said a task force on diversity has been established and will report to the entire faculty.

Holen said several multicultural speakers visited K-State last semester, some from as far away as Thailand.

"We will be happy when the classrooms look like this, rather than what we know they look like now," Holen said, as he pointed out the culturally diverse audience.

Many of the minority students listening to the speech agreed on several points made. Bruce Crawford, doctoral candidate in education, said K-State has done some things to promote a multicultural community, but he said he feels much is left to be desired.

▶Audrey Hepburn, 63, dies of colon cancer

UNITED NATIONS (AP) — Audrey Hepburn, the Oscar-winning actress known for her charm, high-fashion elegance and aristocratic bearing in films such as "Roman Holiday" and "My Fair Lady," died Wednesday, the U.N. Children's Fund said. She was 63.

Hepburn, who had undergone colon cancer surgery last year, had been a longtime goodwill ambassador for the U.N. agency. She died in Switzerland, U.N. spokesman Joe Sills said.

She won an Academy Award for best actress in 1953 for her first American film, "Roman Holiday," the story of a princess who goes out incognito in Rome and falls in love with a journalist.

Furniture designed with time in mind

"I design my furniture for the young, single person who moves around a lot."
DAVID BROWN
ASSISTANT PROFESSOR IN INTERIOR DESIGN

RON LACKEY
Collegian

When David Brown, assistant professor in interior design, designs furniture, he follows the normal requirements of furniture — comfort, looks and practicality. He said he also adds a fourth dimension to his work — time.

"My furniture is aware of time and its different needs," Brown said. "As my needs change through time, so does my furniture."

Brown's furniture is currently on display in the Chang Gallery in Seaton Hall. The exhibit will remain open until Jan. 26.

Brown's furniture is not only comfortable, but it is functional as well. Some pieces double as storage, and some can be folded down, taken apart and moved easily.

"I design my furniture for the young, single person who moves around a lot," Brown said. "When I was younger I moved around quite a bit and this furniture evolved out of my own needs. Time is a dimension we all live through."

The furniture has character of its own, and each piece is designed to solve a certain problem. Brown designed a bed that can be tilted upward, giving access to the storage underneath.

"Sometimes there isn't enough space for drawers, so the bed tilts up, giving access to the cedar-lined bins underneath," he said.

Brown also designed a room-dividing panel system.

Brown's work has been in several competitions and has taken awards at the International Wood Working Fair in Atlanta, Ga.

Students in the gallery were curious about where they could purchase the furniture. April Hasson, senior in hotel and restaurant management, visited the Chang Gallery.

"This stuff is great. I wish you could buy this stuff in a store. It would be a lot nicer than my milk crates," Hasson said.

CORRECTION

In Tuesday's Collegian, the Associated Press story on Page 10 about the investigation of the death of Randall Sheridan contained some inaccuracies. Sheridan was reported to be a truck driver and his age was reported as 41. Sheridan actually sold and applied agricultural products and was 40 at the time of his death.

The Collegian regrets the error.

Clinton brings renewed hope with inauguration

"There is a tremendous sense of optimism. Clinton has a unique opportunity to lead America."
REP. JIM SLATTERY D-KAN.

K-State professor, elected officials excited by changes

SHAWN BRUCE
Collegian

Washington, D.C. — Kansas elected officials and a K-State professor are greeting the inauguration of Bill Clinton with renewed hope.

"There is a tremendous sense of optimism around here," said K-State associate political science professor Joe Unekis. "This is a fantastic part of history."

Unekis is currently on sabbatical from the University working in Washington, D.C., overseeing Democratic Rep. Jim Slattery's intern program and doing research on Congress. This is the first inauguration he's ever attended, and he made sure his wife Shirly got to come as well.

The Unekis' were attending school at Indiana University in 1967 when the school's football team advanced to the Rose Bowl. The couple was all ready to go but decided not to at the last minute, thinking they could go next time. Unfortunately, the Hoosiers haven't made a return trip.

Unekis made sure the couple didn't miss a big event this time.

"I called Shirly (in Manhattan), and said 'Let's do it,'" Unekis said, laughing.

As both a student and professor of the political game, Unekis has given some thought to the upcoming Clinton administration. Unekis said he believes Clinton and Gore have a chance to make a lot of change.

"There's a heightened anticipation that Clinton can pull this off," he said. "The first few weeks will be the proof of the pudding."

Sen. Bob Dole, R-Kan., is also waiting for those first few weeks. Until then, he's cautiously optimistic.

"It's a very exciting time," Dole said. "This is a big celebration and a time for non-partisanship.

"But, we'll have to wait to see what the agenda is. There will be a lot of work to do."

That political agenda is bound to include the question of a line-item veto for the president. Clinton wants it, but Unekis said he thinks Congress won't give it to him.

"It's such a fundamental shift in power," Unekis said. "There's also no definitives. It might cut pork, but it will be the opposing party's pork."

To that end, Slattery has offered a compromise.

In his version, the president would have line-item veto power. However, if it was invoked, Congress could overturn the veto with a simple majority vote in favor.

Currently, a two-thirds majority is required to overturn a veto.

Slattery said he will work this session to make his compromised version law. He also expressed optimism for the future.

"There is a tremendous sense of optimism," he said. "Clinton has a unique opportunity to lead America."

Although Clinton has appeared to back off from some of his campaign promises, Unekis calls them "minor points" and said Clinton's goal and promises remain clear so far.

"I think a lot of those promises were made in the heat of the campaign," Unekis said.

Clinton will be OK, "as long as he handles the deficit and addresses the questions about the New World Order," he said.

"I think a lot of these accusations about broken promises come from the press still waiting for something to happen."

Kansas Gov. Joan Finney said she agrees. She said the optimism she's seen among Kansans has caused her to jump on Clinton's bandwagon.

"I'm very optimistic," Finney said. "The new ideas coming from our campuses, from our high schools. ... It's very reminiscent of the 1960s."

K-Staters join in inaugural celebration

SYLVESTER CHRISTIE
Collegian

Miles away from Washington, D.C., the spirit of President Bill Clinton's inauguration is shared at K-State.

Richard Baier, junior in political science and economics, and treasurer for Young Democrats, has helped with Manhattan's celebration of the inauguration.

"We are busy setting up tables at the Union and selling tickets for the inaugural ball at the Wareham Opera house," Baier said.

Krishna Tummala, professor of political science and director of the master's degree program in public administration, said he highlighted aspects of the inaugural ceremony in his class.

"Constitutionally, only the oath and the inaugural address is required. The other events are just festivities," Tummala said.

He has been following inauguration ceremonies for sometime as a political scientist, he said.

This one, however, is distinctively different from the others, because it is "elaborately organized," Tummala said.

He said he can understand this because Clinton is a gregarious person, and there is a spirit of enthusiasm in the population that he is trying to capture.

The fact that Clinton is from a small town but has Hollywood connections, and the presidential office is one of grandeur, all contribute to the ceremony's length and festive nature, he said.

The expected attendance is 250,000 to 300,000 people, excluding the TV audience, Tummala said.

IN OUR OPINION

By the Collegian Editorial Board

It's the alarm clock, Bill

THE ISSUE

The last week has been a culmination of inaugural festivities against a backdrop of international strife.

WE SUGGEST

President Clinton should hit the ground running by quickly addressing the global problems at hand.

When William Jefferson Clinton woke up this morning, he was the president of the United States.

Two days ago it was all pomp and Fleetwood Mac, champagne and back-slapping. Yesterday it was the big parade, the brass band with "Hail To The Chief" and the official swearing-in.

Today it is Saddam Hussein, Haiti, Yugoslavia, health-care and Somalia.

It must be one hell of a reality check.

Few people get dropped into the broiling heat of the global furnace as Clinton was with his noon inauguration yesterday. Yet by running for the highest office in the land, he could expect nothing less.

Now the celebrating is over and predictions of how Clinton will handle certain situations give way to the real thing.

As a nation we are poised for change of some kind, for better or for worse, and we will follow the first Democratic president in a dozen years in whatever direction his wisdom takes us.

However, this is not the occasion to hand over the reigns to the country, wish Clinton luck, and sit back to experience the ride. As always, the citizens of the United States have perhaps the most important hand in their own destiny.

"Offer more opportunity to all and demand more responsibility from all," said Clinton in his inauguration speech.

No one will demand more of the president than he will of himself.

So get crackin' Bill. Cool off your turntable because the fun is over, at least for the time being. Although our country carries innumerable positives, we are still struggling under our mounting negatives. We now look to you, as well as within ourselves, to turn things around.

Truth and consequences

DAVID EUGENE FRESE

This snow. This ice. It is not the New Dawn I expected. The memory of Wednesday and the Tuesday before it has me puzzled, unsure.

Uncertainty began before now, though. Last September, the new Main Man, then just "The Candidate," came to me by U.S. Mail. There he was, smiling under blue skies on the side of the carport; under the logo of the Rolling Stone in my mailbox.

Eleven pages after an advertisement of either perfume or a shirtless 14-year-old female model, the publisher writes an editorial: The Candidate is The Man. He will change our country, the publisher lauds. Not because he is smart. Not because he has the Balls To Do It. But because of when he was born.

"This is the first election in which the post-World War II generation has the opportunity to take leadership of the nation," the publisher wrote. "Clinton and Gore are men who came of age in the Sixties and whose sensibilities and value systems were formed then. They have the civil-rights movement, the Vietnam War, the cultural revolution, even rock & roll in their blood."

The memories following me approached in succession.Tuesday night. I watch a very white Al Gore clap in honky-time to Chuck Berry and Little Richard at the "American Reunion."

Wednesday. The newspersons, little gray hairs slicked back behind tucked foreheads and young eyes, fortyish and filling time between Geritol ads, all take this age angle: The Generational Shift.

"We have the country now," they seem to be proclaiming. Soon they will say it was theirs all along.

There are about 69 million of them. Baby boomers. That segment of the American population born between the years of 1943 and 1960. They surround us. They are our parents, our professors, and, now, our president.

They are the folks who tell us what's important. They are the people who tell us minorities are people of color. They tell us they stopped a war. They spell women womyn. They dance cheek-to-cheek to the "Rumours" album.

We, however, are America's 13th generation, known by several names – Generation X, twentysomethings, Thirteeners – and by several other modifiers – lazy, apathetic, addicted to TV, bad at math.

Baby boomers are to us what ponytails and self-esteem are to backwards-worn baseball caps and body-piercing.

There may be good in this generational shift, but I wonder what it means for our generation. The generation the publisher of Rolling Stone talks of is not the one I "remember."

He sees Free Love, but I see AIDS. He sees weed and LSD, but I see a nation of addicts alternately shooting up and shooting our brothers and sisters. He sees an end to war, but I see us being sent to protect oil interests for the Beemer Fleets.

He sees the civil-rights movement, but I see 40-year-old policemen beating a man in the headlighted street. He sees the sexual revolution, but I see two things: friends visiting one parent at Thanksgiving and one parent at Christmas, and Clarence Thomas and Anita Hill gaining good television ratings.

Bill Clinton, smarter than I credit him for being, realizes this, perhaps fortunately.

He says of the Sixties in the accompanying Rolling Stone interview, "It didn't all work out, but we did a lot of good."

The publisher, giving the interview, selling out, putting The Candidate on the cover, quickly asks, slobbering like a stupid damn dog, "What did we do that was good?"

Bill had an answer, but, in light of the bad that came with the good, I don't. I wonder if that is apathy.

Actions of fans mar K-State basketball

Editor,

Fellow students of this prestigious establishment titled Kansas State University, I would not be surprised nor disappointed if ESPN broadcasting never knocked on the doors of our university again.

I have lived in this good town of Manhattan since grade school and have enjoyed watching KSU athletics through the years. I remember the "ol' barn a' rockin'" when "The Sarge" would sky for a dunk, or Will Scott would bust a trey while Mitch would take it to the hoop on the inside, and every night the elder Henson would work his magic unnoticed. I have never, though, seen the immature antics that have plagued our stands recently.

The Cats got beat. Hats off to the 'Hawks and to Roy, they out-played us for one night — actually less than one half. Neither losing nor losing to the Jayhawks is deserving of pennies being thrown at a team. If a person desires to throw items anything onto a playing surface, they should take a trip back to high school because that's where you and your pubescent actions belong.

You have disgraced our school and our good teams on national television and have upheld our not-so-esteemed title of the backwards-hick-farmboy university.

Congratulations.

Roy Williams said that if he found the culprit, he wouldn't hesitate with a good 'ol round of ass whippin'. I think it would be a tag-team event because I, for once, would be in his corner.

▶ LETTERS

No need to worry, here come the letters

Editor,

Richard Andrade won't have to wait long before letters-to-the-editor start pouring in. Remember that this is the semester that most freshmen take Comp II (now called Expos II), the course that focuses on argument.

Soon, thousands of formerly rational and reasonable freshmen will be looking for "outrageous" campus policies about which to feign indignation. Impractical, expensive, and often frighteningly fascist solutions to negligible problems will soon abound.

Where will we find the funding for the multi-level subterranean parking garage with atmospherically controlled access tunnels that this campus so desperately needs? Where will the highly-trained "bike path cops" sleep and engage in target practice? How can we convince such-and-such a segment of society to be sterilized, tattooed or put to sleep?

In addition to such urgent proposals, every argument hinging on constitutional interpretation will be revived. Oh yes, pretty soon the opinion page will be as lively as ever. Who needs Brad Seabourn?

Making sense of Islam and the Arab world

BRAD SEABOURN

Saddam Hussein has succeeded in focusing world attention once again on the Middle East. One has to ask why has not this despot, whom former president Bush likened to Hitler in personality, power, and potential, been toppled as Bush and many military experts predicted at the end of the Gulf War? The answer lies in understanding what it means to be Arab ... which ultimately lies in understanding Islam.

Obviously, the "Coalition," which is largely composed of Western nations under cover of U.N. authority, has failed to comprehend either one.

Followers of Abu al-Qasim Mohammed ibn Abd Allah ibn Abd al-Muttalib ibn Hashim — simply called "Mohammed" or "The Prophet" by the faithful — face toward the Holy City of Mecca five times a day to pray.

I challenge any of you to think of a single thing you do faithfully five times a day.

Yet, for the typical Muslim, constant daily prayer is only one of five obligations — accepting one God and Mohammed as His Prophet; giving a portion of one's income to the needy; fasting from dawn to dusk during the holy month of Ramadan; and making the hadj or pilgrimage to Mecca at least once during a believer's lifetime.

For a Muslim, the only book worth reading is the Koran. There is no other literature.

The Koran consists of 114 chapters of Allah's revelations to Mohammed, and represents the only divine scripture in Islam. Between it and the Sunna, which contains the sayings and deeds of the Prophet, every aspect of life, from criminal punishment, to alcohol, to gambling, to marriage, to bathing, to the proper position for sexual intercourse, is covered.

Although many Christians will deny it, Islam is closer to Christianity than to any other major religion. Muslims accept Jesus Christ as a prophet (but not the son of God) and Mary as Jesus' mother. They place great importance on Adam, Noah, Abraham, Moses, Jacob and Job. They believe in a heaven and a hell and in a resurrection of the body after death. Christianity and Islam both began with the life's work of one man, although Mohammed was entirely mortal and a historically verifiable figure.

Yet, what Mohammed brought to the world almost fourteen hundred years ago was considerably more than just a religion. It was a truly different way of life — a new political and economic system with a new set of laws and a code for social behavior. Unlike Christianity, it is not so much a belief as it is a way of life. There is no separation of church and state because Islam is the very substance of life itself to the Muslim. Each and every human life is a statement of Islam.

Early in the history of Islam, Mohammed attempted to win the loyalty of the Jews by emphasizing the similarities between Islam and Judaism. The Jews rejected him as an Arabian prophet. Their rejection eventually turned to scorn and the Muslim's tolerance of the Jews was likewise replaced with contempt.

The Crusades of the twelfth and thirteenth centuries in which Christians perpetrated the wholesale slaughter of Muslims and Jews by the thousands did nothing to endear Christians to Arabs. In fact, it was largely due to the Crusades that Arabs came to understand that unity and survival were synonymous, that Western intervention (and eventually Western culture) posed a continuing threat to Islam and that isolation was the surest means of enduring. Had it not been for the discovery of oil and the illegitimate creation of the nation of Israel in the Middle East, their isolation would probably have continued to this day.

Fundamentalism in any religion means setting aside one's brain in favor of self-righteous, irrational, anti-intellectualism. When fundamentalism becomes militant it is dangerous. When it becomes militant and Islamic, it is deadly, and there is not a government in the world (including Saddam's) that does not fear militant Islam as the most significant challenge to stability in the Middle East, and ultimately the world.

Yet, Islam all over the Middle East is currently undergoing just such a transformation — a militant, fundamentalist revival whose roots stem from the defeat of the Arab armies (and thus Arab unity) during the Six-Day War in 1967. It is a revival essentially driven by U.S. support and collaboration with Israel, for it was with considerable help from the U.S. that the Six-Day War enabled Israel to evolve as the Middle East's first regional superpower. To most Arabs, the military defeat was viewed in typical Islamic fashion as an expression of God's displeasure. They believed they were being punished for having drifted away from Islam. Arabs young and old have returned to the only constant in a sea of war, poverty, injustice, and Western oppression, to expunge the guilt of having failed God — and that constant is Islam.

Saddam Hussein knows this. He knows the sentiment of the common Arab because it is his sum and substance. Whether he actually believes in the tenets of Islam is irrelevant. The fact is, he is Arab and he lives Islam. He has survived the Western armies' onslaught during the Gulf War. To an Arab, fundamentalist or not, survival is winning. And winning means the favor of Allah.

The Iraqis have no intention of removing (or allowing the U.S. to remove) Saddam Hussein from power as long as he remains a winner, a survivor.

To do so would not be Arab ... and it would not be Islam.

Senate meets to discuss new position

KEVIN STRECKER
Collegian

Student Senate could change its constitution tonight in order to elect a student body vice president.

Senate will meet at 7 p.m. in the Union Big 8 Room to discuss the bill. If passed, names of vice presidential candidates will be placed on April's Student Governing Association ballots for the first time.

Currently, the officer acting under the president has been chief-of-staff.

"This person is in charge of running the president's staff," Ian Bautista, Senate chairman, said. "They don't have time to take care of what would be a vice president's responsibilities."

If Senate elects to pass the bill, there will still be the position of chief-of-staff.

"That person would still run the president's staff, but wouldn't have to worry about the vice-presidential duties," Bautista said.

The revisions state that requirements for the vice-presidential candidate be the same as the presidential candidate. Elections will be held the same way, except each presidential candidate will have a running mate on the same ticket.

On the Wednesday following the election, there will be a run-off. Again, both names will be on the ticket.

According to the bill, persons wishing to run for these positions will file jointly to run on the ballot. The application should include both names, the candidates' colleges, and specification of which candidate is running for which office. This must be filed two weeks prior to the general election.

The vice president's job will include assisting the president in all executive duties and attending meetings and functions at the request of the president. The vice president will succeed the office of the president in the event of resignation, removal or permanent disability.

Also being presented are two bills allocating money to the Aikido Club and the Ice Hockey Club.

The Aikido Club is requesting $1,150 for the purchase of a polymerized canvas over-pad, needed to create a safe practice surface.

The Ice Hockey Club is asking for $1,000 for ice rental.

All bills will be voted on at a later date.

Troops deployed to Kuwaiti border

ASSOCIATED PRESS

KUWAIT — American soldiers dug in near the border with Iraq on Wednesday to counter any assault from across the desert frontier.

The deployment came as President Clinton took the oath of office in Washington, becoming the first new American president in nearly a quarter-century to assume office with U.S. troops on combat duty.

The tensions with Iraq promise to be Clinton's first major foreign policy test. Baghdad on Wednesday abided by a unilateral cease-fire but promised to rebuild a factory blasted by U.S. missiles last Sunday.

About 300 men from the U.S. Army's 1st Cavalry Division traveled by convoy to the border area, known as Al-Dayra Range, said Lt. Col. Ned Longsworth, 43, of Fort McPherson, Ga.

They are part of a 1,300-strong battalion from the 1st Cavalry's 9th Regiment, based in Fort Hood, Texas, sent to shore up the emirate's defenses after Iraq raided border posts.

American troops said they expected no encounters with Saddam's forces along the border.

The soldiers are veterans of the 1991 Persian Gulf War, in which U.S.-led forces pushed Iraqi invaders from Kuwait.

DC power energizes Wildcat frontline play

SCOTT ABEL

Success hasn't come overnight for Wildcat center Deryl Cunningham.

But free of the hype that surrounded him his first collegiate season, "D.C." is now showing the potential that made him a McDonald's All-American in high school.

Cunningham

After averaging only 3.6 points and 3.6 rebounds a game last season, Cunningham has become a centerpiece on the Wildcats' starting lineup in 1993.

"Rebounding, some post-up defense, scoring down low — we need a lot of things from him for us to be successful this year," guard Askia Jones said.

Thirteen games into the season, Cunningham is averaging 10.1 points and 7.9 rebounds a game, a turnaround that Cunningham said is due to hard work in the summer.

"I put in a lot of hours," he said. "And I came back saying that things had gotten tough for the team, and I was going to get tough.

"I know I give up size, but with my mentality, I think I can play anybody in the country."

Cunningham's statistics this year back him up. The 6-foot-7-inch junior is leading the Wildcats in rebounds, including a 15-board effort against Colorado last Saturday.

He held 7-foot Oklahoma State center Bryant Reeves to six rebounds in the Cats' overtime win in Stillwater and helped force Reeves into seven turnovers.

Cunningham was originally recruited and signed by DePaul University in his hometown of Chicago. He came out of St. Joseph's High School tabbed the 19th-best prep player nationwide.

But under Coach Joey Meyer, Cunningham scored less than a point a game and got an average of just six minutes of playing time as a freshman.

"Every time I stepped on the court at DePaul, it was like they were expecting this all-American to set the world on fire," he said. "Of course it didn't happen."

The pressure from fans' expectations and his lack of playing time led Cunningham to transfer.

"They said I was going to play on the wing with David Booth, but we ended up playing the same position," he said. "I wasn't going to sit behind him for three more years."

Cunningham considered playing at Indiana or Illinois. But he chose K-State after being recruited by Wildcat assistant coach Ken Turner.

"My dad was real impressed with Coach Turner," Cunningham said. "He talked about things that we really like — academically and about coaching — and he knew that they'd take care of me."

After sitting out the the 1991 season as a redshirt, Cunningham struggled on the court. His playing time dwindled as the season wore on, and he spent more and more time on the bench.

"It was frustrating," Cunningham said. "I wanted to do well, and it seemed like when I was coming in, things were going wrong.

"A big part of it was that I just wasn't ready to play, and I didn't understand a lot of things that Coach Turner was saying about playing the game."

Cunningham averaged only 11 minutes a game in Big Eight play last year, something his off-season practice has changed.

"Sometimes you work at it, and the rewards aren't there," Head coach Dana Altman said. "D.C. has worked hard in the off-season and spent more time than anybody on his game and is being rewarded for it. That's encouraging to see."

Cunningham said the unselfishness of this year's squad is what separates it from last year's seventh-place team.

"It's a lot better than last year when you've got guys concerned with winning and doing the little things it takes to win," he said.

"Whether it's making the extra pass or picking up a loose ball or rebound, the guys are worrying more about that than whether they've scored 30 points.

"This team is getting caught up in winning. I know I am."

Intramural hoops tips off

New rule at the Rec forces bleeding players to sit out, change attire

BRIAN ANDERSON
Collegian

The sounds of sneakers skidding the floor and basketballs pounding the hardwood will fill the air Friday night when the intramural basketball season begins at the Rec Complex.

Unless, of course, there is blood on a player or a jersey, in which case the officials will stop the game.

The Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex will be enforcing a new law required by the Occupational Safety and Health Administration to protect people in the workplace — and on the basketball court.

It is designed to help protect people from the diseases carried in the blood, like HIV, the virus that causes AIDS.

"If a player is bleeding, he or she will be taken out until the bleeding is stopped," associate director of Recreational Services Steve Martini said.

"The bleeding has to be stopped and covered before entering the game."

If the player has blood on his or her jersey, the jersey must be taken off and replaced with a new one.

"They won't come in until the blood comes off. We do this to safeguard the players and people," Martini said.

Players who have blood-stained garments and no replacement clothing will be required to sit out the game.

High schools and the NCAA are following the same procedure, he said.

"People have to be protected to minimize the contact of blood," Martini said. "There are many things that blood can carry.

"A person might not know if he is HIV-positive and would get cut," he said. "We want to make sure the players are protected."

The new law could result in a decline in fighting and pushing during games.

"I might think again about fighting," said Jason Feil, who was kicked out of an intramural basketball game last year for fighting.

"It might change the way players play the game."

Martini said three athletic trainers will be at every game to take care of minor cuts and bleeding.

There are 325 teams signed up to play basketball for league play — a number slightly down from last year, Martini said.

Men's teams are divided into four categories: fraternities, residence halls, independents and 6-foot-and-under division.

Women and co-rec teams play within their own divisions.

The teams are organized into leagues, and each team plays every team in its league. The winner of each league will advance into the playoffs to determine the best team in the division.

The winners from the men's divisions will play in the all-University tournament.

Schedules for intramural basketball games will be posted today, Martini said. The first games will be played at 4 p.m.

Wednesday marked the first day of intramurals for several other intramural sports, including both four-wall handball doubles and four-wall raquetball doubles.

Table tennis doubles also began Wednesday afternoon.

SPORTS DIGEST

▶ROYALS SIGN MILLER, LOSE EISEY

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — Infielder Keith Miller avoided arbitration Tuesday and signed a one-year contract with the Kansas City Royals, and former Royal outfielder Jim Eisenreich signed with the Philadelphia Phillies.

Miller, who received about $575,00 last year, signed for an estimated $1.09 million, his first contract with the Royals and most productive in the majors.

Miller, 29, hit .284 with four home runs and 38 RBI, but was limited to 106 games because of injuries.

Eisenreich, the American League's top pinch-hitter, signed a one-year contract with the Phillies for $600,000.

Eisenreich, 33, hit .370 with 10 hits in 27 at bats and compiled a .400 on-base percentage in 27 pinch-hitting appearances. He hit .269 with two home runs and 28 RBI for the season in 113 games.

▶BARKLEY FINED AND SUSPENDED

NEW YORK (AP) — Charles Barkley was suspended without pay for one game and fined $10,000 by the NBA today for vaulting over the scorer's table and arguing with an official after Phoenix's recent loss to the New York Knicks.

In Monday's 106-103 loss to the Knicks, Barkley missed a shot in the final seconds but thought he was fouled. He leaped over the scorer's table and chased official Jim Clark after the two exchanged words at the end of the game.

The incident was reported to the league, and Thorn told Barkley he must sit out tonight's game between the Suns and Cleveland Cavaliers in Richfield, Ohio.

▶BIG 8 TEAMS POST BIG VICTORIES

Three Big Eight teams played posted decisive non-conference home victories Wednesday night.

The Nebraska Cornhuskers beat up on Sacramento State, 86-70 with leading scorer Eric Piatkowski out with the flu.

The 8-6 Colorado Buffaloes avenged an early-season loss to the University of Missouri-Kansas City by posting a 88-66 win.

Justus Thigpen's 23 points led the Iowa State Cyclones, now 10-5, to a 91-63 win.

Immature 'fans' make us look bad

Maybe I didn't make myself clear last week.

Maybe we could just recycle last week's headline for this column — our basketball team needs better fans, and that point was reiterated after K-State's loss to the Hawks.

Whatever the case may be, here we go again.

Jan. 18, 1993 — Manhattan: KU Guard Rex Walters was hit in head with a coin after the Jayhawks' 71-65 win over K-State at Bramlage Coliseum.

KU Coach Roy Williams responded in his post-game comments with thinly veiled anger. "That's happened two times now. Two teams played their butts off and some sick individual does that.

"We don't need that."

Walters said he wasn't badly hurt.

"It's too bad," Walters said. "Kansas State has come a long way and their fans are still at that level."

TROY COVERDALE

As much as I hate to agree with Rex, I understand exactly where he's coming from. In two appearances on ESPN this season, K-State's teams have played well and brought accolades to the school.

But one group of childish, immature fans have been seen on each occasion trying to snag a little TV attention.

Monday night, Jim Valvano commented that the Wildcats were as good a coached team as he had seen — a feather in the cap of Wildcat coach Dana Altman.

On Tuesday night, ESPN's Sportscenter ran a story on how badly K-State's fans performed after the game.

I know, and we all know, it is not right to blame the entire K-State populace for what happened. But that is why, as fans, we have to change what happens.

In yesterday's edition of this newspaper, the men currently in charge of the athletic department — Richard Krause and Jim Epps — stated anyone caught throwing items will be ejected, and so on, and so on.

That is where you can help. If you see a person preparing to make that toss, get an usher. Bramlage hires those people for many reasons, and this is one of them. Just look for the person in a flaming pink shirt.

It all comes down to a fine line between "fans" and "idiots." And so, without further adieu, I present the Troy Coverdale Guide to Fans and Idiots.

A fan salutes both teams after one of the best ball games seen at Bramlage in the past couple of years.

An idiot throws coins at an opponent.

A fan applauds when an injured player (ours or theirs) gets up off of the floor and is escorted to the bench.

An idiot cheers when an opposing player gets hurt.

A fan "disagrees" with a referee's call.

An idiot "disagrees" with the call by using racial comments.

A fan hollers, cheers, is vociferous, loud and in general, screaming-bonkers for the team.

An idiot tries to spit on Barkley during a game.

A fan "celebrates" after the game by applauding the team for a great win.

An idiot tears down the goal posts — just to get on TV — after defeating Iowa State.

Lastly, a fan is what the majority of you were at the game Monday night.

The idiot was the person who threw a coin. That, in turn, made us all look like idiots.

Unfortunately, it marred an evening that meant a lot to many K-Staters and Wildcat alumni.

Not only was the game on national TV, but the night was set aside to honor a great Wildcat — Dev Nelson.

The team had the black armbands, and the usual moment of silence was held before the game. The excitement level, the fan noise and the game itself would have pleased Dev — until the last.

I remember one fall afternoon, when I was much younger, and my dad and I were in the truck getting some part for the car. Something like that — you know, one of those "jobs" that as a kid you thought made you a big shot.

Anyway, we were listening to Dev call a football game, and it was then that I fell in love with what I do now — radio sports.

He painted such a great picture with words, and it's a goal of mine to do the same with every broadcast.

It is today, one day after Dev's funeral, that I salute him. Wherever you are Dev, I'm sure it's a "real hootenang deep-dish double dilly."

We'll all miss you, old friend. Hopefully, we'll do you justice with better behavior as Wildcat fans.

You certainly deserve it.

Drama students compete in festival

JULIE CORBIN
Collegian

K-State drama students are competing at the regional American College Theater Festival in Minneapolis, Minn., this week.

Ten students will be competing for two $1,000 scholarships in memory of Irene Ryan, the actress who played Granny in the "Beverly Hillbillies" TV comedy. Students will also be bidding for the chance to perform at the national competition at the Kennedy Center for the Performing Arts in Washington, D.C.

Throughout the year, teams of professors from the region attend productions and nominate up to two individuals from the production. These nominees are then able to compete in the regional competition against colleges from six other states.

At the regional contest, students give two five-minute presentations from the production from which they were nominated. One scene is with a partner, and the other is usually a monologue.

Kevin Kelly, senior in theater, first attended the competition as a partner and felt it was a good experience. This year he is attending as a nominee.

"It gave me a feel for how things work and what all goes on," Kelly said.

Marci Corey, junior in theater, is attending the competition for the first time as Kelly's partner. They are performing a scene from "Marat/Sade".

"I'm scared to death to go as a partner, but I just have to make him (Kelly) look good. I can do that," Corey said.

Competition at the regional level is "intensely fierce" Harold Nichols, head of the speech department, said.

"I expect several students to do very well. When it comes down to the final choices, those then become a very personal matter for the judges. A lot of it depends upon the taste of the judges, how they like the material, how they like the students and what they are looking for as far as strong acting goes," Nichols said.

Cory Hayes, senior in theater, is also going to the competition.

"I expect to do well. I want to do well. I think everybody expects to do well, otherwise, it wouldn't be a competition," Hayes said.

REVIEW

Funk connections in Stereo

MEGANNE MOORE
Collegian

A bizarre trip into the migration of a new realm of "hip hop" can be made with the Stereo MCs.

The U.K. funkateers are leading the '90s rap/funk scene with their latest sampling of diverse sounds on "Connected."

The first single off the album meshes dance sounds with funk in a unique style. This creates a more free design of music possibilities into which the band plunges.

The album is the third venture in the band's six-year existence.

Throughout the CD, the MCs bound into their varied influences, ranging from dance, to reggae, to rap, to soul, to funk.

The MCs approach lyrics in the same manner as they do their music — spiritually and emotionally, reminding the listener from behind every bass and horn that wisdom and perception prevails.

"Connected" has steady beat sounds, danceable, yet nice to sit and listen to. It's not a CD to play constantly; the songs begin to blend after time.

Not being a devoted fan of hip hop, I found the MCs an interesting introduction to the funky sound. They claim to be "a result" of all the music they have really liked.

"Connected" is a conscious attempt by the band to appeal to various audiences. The MCs have placed their odd ideas for melodies and chord sequences in a sample to transform the new school of hip hop to their definition.

Because of the band's wide array of music sampling, the MCs make it vitally clear to their audiences that their domain of music is not one to be categorized.

This CD raises the listener to the awareness that human beings lack the connection between one another, and the songs try to make the "connection" to bring people closer.

Good vibes seep through this intense breakthrough of funk and hip hop. The reggae influences and rock decibels advance the band's revolutionary form, unmistakably MCs.

YOU'RE ASKING ME?

by Cassandra Duveaux

Reader having trouble staying away from drug crowd

DEAR CASSANDRA,

I think I am a drug addict. Whenever I go back home I always fall into the same crowd — the heavy metal pot smokers. I really didn't think that it was a problem until I went home for Christmas break. All of my friends from back home have moved onto bigger and better things. To put it mildly, they are hooked on cocaine. At first I turned it down. Then it was always around. I tried it a couple of times. I know that it is bad for you and fries your brain, but it is such an up. I don't do anything besides drink when I'm up here, but it is when I go home I do all of these drugs (marijuana and coke). I hate it when I go home and fall back into the same old routine. My parents would kill me if they ever found out what I have done. I have considered many times to get help and all that, but I don't have a lot of money and I would like to keep it confidential. Any suggestions?

Addicted

DEAR ADDICTED,

You have made the first step down the road to recovery — realizing you have a problem and wanting to do something about it. If you are concerned about the cost of getting help, I'd ask you to consider the cost to yourself and others of not getting help. Lafene offers free counseling services. Take advantage of these services. You've already paid for them.

In the meantime, don't hang with the people you know will get you into trouble. Go to a movie, work out, go to dinner, watch television, go for a walk with a friend — any of these activities beat crisping your noggin.

Let me know how things turn out.

DEAR CASSANDRA,

I have a huge problem. It's my butt. I have an unusually large rear end and it's ruining my life. First of all, I can no longer wear normal pants because they are much too tight. Secondly, all of my friends call me "Jabba the Butt." Lastly, and most importantly, my girlfriend has refused to have sex with me for more than three years because of it. I'm sick of living the celibate life and being made fun of, but I just can't seem to lose the excess weight on my rear end. Please give me some advice.

Jabba the Butt

DEAR JABBA,

I can tell your ample posterior is weighing heavily on your mind. Our self-esteem is often closely related to our appearance. You don't say if you have seen a doctor about your condition. You also don't mention what exercise, if any, you have done to work off the weight. I urge you to seek medical advice.

As for your sex life, have an honest chat with your girlfriend about your love life. If you haven't had sex for three years (assuming you both enjoyed a normal sex life together previously), I would guess the problem is bigger than your behind. Talk to her.

Clinton, Gore take oaths of office, begin new era

see the pain and promise of America. Let's give this capital back to the people to whom it belongs."

Clinton closed with a call for action.

"We have heard the trumpets. We have heard the call," he said. "Now, with God's help we must answer that call."

Reaction to Clinton's speech along the parade route was very upbeat.

"I thought it was a very good speech," Jim LaRue from Baltimore, Md, said. "It was almost Kennedyesque. I thought it was well delivered."

Amy Sears, from Arlington, Va., also had positive thoughts on the speech.

"The speech was impressive. I hope that he can come through on some of what he has promised, but I think the new administration provides a glimmer of hope."

The inauguration parade was delayed by almost an hour. Once started, observers along Pennsylvania Avenue were treated to an array of participants, including a float full of Elvis impersonators.

Clinton emerged from his motorcade to walk the parade route before going to the White House.

Parade organizers estimated that one million people lined the parade route.

Second Congressional District of Kansas, said the money raised will go toward supporting future campaigns.

"We felt that if we couldn't raise money for headquarters and the support of future candidates tonight, then when could we?" she said.

Some students attended the social affair in hopes of meeting Riley County Democrats.

"I thought it would be great to come down, show my support for Clinton and meet people," said Gretchen Morgan, sophomore in arts and sciences undecided.

Kowalczewski said," I think Clinton is non-arguably the most intelligent president we've had in an awful long time and arguably the best politician/salesman president that we've had. These two confirmations are necessary for the change we need to undergo in this country."

"It is an American reunion," said Michelle Smith, sophomore in political science. "People will work together to solve problems together as a nation. There is a lot to look forward to for our nation."

TOPEKA — The Kansas People's Party brought local Clinton/Gore supporters together to celebrate victory on inauguration night in Topeka.

The event, which began at 7 p.m. Wednesday in the Ramada Inn Regency Ballroom, was a success despite the bad weather, said Robert Swanson, executive director of the Kansas Democratic Party.

About 400 people attended the informal event, which featured snacks, drinks and live music, he said.

Former Lieutenant Gov. Tom Docking, who was scheduled to host the party, was unable to attend because of bad road conditions.

"We wanted to give the people a chance to celebrate the excitement in the air with the Clinton/Gore administration," Swanson said.

While the band, the Exceptions, played Nat King Cole's "Unforgettable," the party-goers shared memories about what was for them an unforgettable year.

Vendors sold Clinton T-shirts, campaign buttons and "Hillary Chipper" buttons, complete with free cookies and a recipe.

"They presented one of these buttons to Hillary in Kansas City. She was really glad to know they're doing this," said Jean Taylor, a member of the Democratic Women's Organization.

The event was originally called the Kansas People's Inauguration and changed to the Kansas People's Party, Swanson said.

"That evolution of names is indicative of how we decided to let Kansans who wanted to celebrate come out here and do so," Swanson said.

Swanson read a letter from Docking written for the occasion.

In his letter, Docking said, "President Clinton spoke today of 'a season of American renewal' and challenged each of us to do our unique part in revitalizing our democracy and building a better future for our children.

"These powerful words could teach us much about our future and our aspirations as Kansans as well," the letter read.

"It's a new beginning," said George Wingert, Gov. Finney's liaison to the Kansas Senate.

Mobile home fire ruled accident

Tenants say fire was predictable

A fire that destroyed a mobile home on Tuesday was ruled an accident. Some tenants of the Tuttle Terrace Mobile Home Park say it could have been prevented.

"I've been expecting this to happen," John Farley, tenant, said. "There have been gas leaks before."

The fire started when Anthony Carrington tried to light a stove, and it exploded. The mobile home was completely destroyed. Carrington recieved minor burns on one arm.

Kristina Molzahn, junior in psychology, had moved into the mobile home about the first of the year. Carrington was a guest in the home.

They found the leak a few days before the fire.

"It was this last weekend we heard a noise," Molzahn said. "We turned around and the back of the stove was on fire." They got the fire out by turning off the gas supply.

She said they tried to report the leak to the manager of the park, Randy Fountain.

"We tried calling them," Molzahn said. "They were out of town for two days."

Fountain said he had not received any messages of a leak.

"When we rent the homes we give them a letter that has numbers of places such as KP&L that they can call to get things fixed," Fountain said. "They wouldn't have had to call here."

Farley said he has the sheet, but they were told to call the manager first.

"All we know is that we're supposed to call Randy if something needs to be fixed and fill out a work order before anything gets done," Farley said.

This is not the first problem with propane the Farley's have had, and Kristie Farley, tenant, said they have a leak now.

"We had a leaky stove for two weeks, and finally they brought us an electric stove," Kristie Farley said.

"The night of the fire we had a break in," Kristie Farley said. "The officer told me he could smell it outside."

Some tenants said they have not had problems, but they've known of the problem.

Students at K-State will vote on more than the student body president during the fall semester.

Thursday night, Student Senate passed a bill that will create the office of student body vice president. The need for this office was apparent in the discussion presented by Mike Porter, senior in elementary education and attorney general of senate.

"I see three reasons for a student body vice president. Those three reasons include students, efficiency and the executive branch," Porter said.

Porter was co-author of the bill, which first came up at the last meeting in December. The bill was tabled because only 42 senators were in attendance when the bill was discussed, and a minimum of 45 senators is needed to pass a bill.

Right now, students do not elect the successor to the student body president. With this bill, students will have that right.

"The student body vice president needs to be a position exclusively as back up to the student body president," Porter said.

To be considered an eligible candidate for the position of vice president, a student must be a member of Senate who is recognized as a full-time student by his or her respective college or school.

The executive branch is not as efficient as it could be, Porter said. With the office of vice president approved, the attorney general would be eliminated from the executive branch. This would make the Senate more efficient by the attorney general not serving on two branches of the Senate.

If the constitution including the office of vice president is passed by the college councils, with a two-thirds vote, the bill will take effect for the election in the fall.

In other business, three bills on first reading were approved on special orders by Senate.

The Aikido Club was allocated $1,150 for the purchase of a polymerized canvas over-pad. The pad will create a safer practice surface.

The Ice Hockey Club was allocated $1,000 for ice rental in Wichita and Kansas City.

Senate also voted to remove funds totaling $751.85 from the SGA foundation account to pay to the 4-H Foundation. The funds were put into the foundation account by participants of the 1992 Student Senate retreat.

Donald Rathbone, dean of the College of Engineering, received a special life achievement award for his service to minority students Thursday at the Martin Luther King Jr. Observance Week post-convocation luncheon.

The award was presented by Cheryl May, chairwoman of the Advisory Committee on Minority Affairs, and Veryl Switzer, associate director of Intercollegiate Athletics.

The Conoco Presidential Award goes to individuals for distinguished services in minority education. The selection committee worked with the advisory committee to choose Rathbone for this award.

"During discussions about the Conoco, we started talking about Rathbone and realized his efforts toward diversity deserved special recognition," James Coffman, provost and member of the Conoco selection committee, said. "Rathbone had an engineering program for minority recruitment long before anyone else did."

In 1978, Rathbone established the Minority Engineering Program, which is a full-time minority recruitment and retention program.

CORRECTION

Due to a reporting error, the News Digest in Wednesday's Collegian contained an incorrect attribution.

K-State police investigator Richard Herrman was indirectly quoted as saying the projectile that entered the Cardwell Hall classroom was probably a pellet or a b.b. The information was actually obtained from Sgt. Andrew Amaro, also of the campus police.

In a story on Page 2 of Thursday's Collegian, David Brown was misidentified as an assistant professor in interior design. He is an assistant professor in interior architecture.

The Collegian regrets the errors.

Human Ecology receives grants

Department buildings to be linked, construction planned to begin in early spring

DIANE HUTCHISON
Collegian

The College of Human Ecology received a $400,000 gift to build a connecting building between the Early Childhood Laboratory and the Family Center.

"This is what the donors wanted," said Stephan Bollman, professor of human development and family studies.

"These people are alumni from K-State," said Barbara Stowe, dean of the College of Human Ecology.

Dr. Joseph Galichia graduated from K-State in 1964 and then went on to medical school. Kathryn Galichia graduated from the College of Human Ecology and is president of the foundation.

"The contribution from the Galichia Foundation will support the construction," Stowe said.

Stowe said responsibility will now lie with the faculty of the college to work with the University architect and a Wichita architecture firm to decide what will be done.

"Since it's donated money, we don't have to use the state architect," Bollman said.

They will meet with an architecture firm in Wichita this week. Stowe said the firm will be responsible for refining the plans and drawings.

"We have preliminary drawings already made up," Stowe said. "You have to have something on paper to communicate what you want to the architects."

Stowe said they also received a $100,000 gift from the Forrest Clyde Lattner Foundation Inc.

"They're interested in the same kind of work as the Galichia Foundation," Stowe said. "Kathryn helped introduce them to us."

The Family Center is located on the corner of Campus Creek Road behind King Hall, with the Early Childhood Laboratory beside it. Bollman said he has been drawing floor plans for the connection for years.

"This is really a kind of dream to make things more efficient," Bollman said. "It just makes sense to have one building rather than two, which are really kind of small. We use every inch of space we have, and then some."

John Murray, head of the human development and family studies department, said the hope is for construction to begin in early spring.

"It depends on when the snow melts," Murray said.

De Luccie said the sessions they hold for preschool age children follow the school board's schedule. There are no sessions offered in the summer, so there wouldn't be many conflicts with the construction.

Murray said the physical link of the two buildings will not only provide more efficiency but an intellectual link.

"This is a chance to bring specialists together and have those in childhood development also consider family development, and those in family development consider the whole lifespan," Murray said.

"With our age distribution, it is really common to be parents at middle age," he said. "They not only have children to take care of, many of them also have elderly parents that they may have to care for."

He said some also have to deal with a family member with Alzheimer's disease.

"Those stresses added to being a parent can make family development difficult," Murray said.

Many faculty members studying these issues, he said, and the construction of the connection will give them better opportunities to bring the faculty together to talk about them.

Court hears appeal from Gulf War vet

Circumstances cited, Turner claims war stress

ASSOCIATED PRESS

TOPEKA — A district court judge abused his discretion in sentencing Jason L. Turner, convicted of a fall 1991 murder, his attorney told the Kansas Supreme Court Thursday.

The judge sentenced Turner to terms of life and 10 years to life for the first-degree murder and kidnapping of Catherine Heintze while she was working at a convenience store in Milford, just west of Manhattan.

Turner was sentenced for Heintze's September '91 shooting death during an attempted robbery of the Milford convenience store.

The court heard Turner's appeal of his sentences. Under normal handling, a ruling would be made public on March 5, the court's next opinion day.

The sentences, imposed after Turner pleaded no contest in Geary County District Court, were flawed because the judge refused to consider as a mitigating factor the defense's claim that Turner suffered from post-traumatic stress disorder due to an incident during the Persian Gulf War.

Turner and Nathaniel Ellibee, wearing military clothing, took a HUM-V military vehicle from Fort Riley to use in the robbery, the prosecution claimed.

The robbery failed when Heintze triggered a silent alarm. Ellibee noticed the alarm and fled the scene, but Turner aimed a high-powered rifle at Heintze, a K-State student, and fired once. The slug struck her in the head.

In the appeal, his attorney noted that Turner, a veteran of Operation Desert Storm, had said he killed three Iraqi soldiers in Saudi Arabia with a pistol he smuggled to the desert.

The appeal petition said when Ellibee left the store, Turner "felt alone and trapped, like in a foxhole, when he shot Heintze."

ACADEMICS

PC intro class to raise standards

LORI SCHREIBER
Collegian

Any student wanting to take Introduction to Personal Computing must complete College Algebra with a C or better, starting next semester.

This is a change from the previous rule, requiring only completion of College Algebra. The change occurred Jan. 1, 1993, when the Department of Computing and Information Sciences switched from the College of Arts and Sciences to the College of Engineering.

Virgil Wallentine, head of the Department of Computing and Information Sciences, said the switch will benefit the students in the department.

"The nature of our undergraduate program is a problem-solving discipline similar to engineering, and it is important that our students be associated with and around that kind of college," Wallentine said.

Personal Computing is the only class that will be affected by the switch. Wallentine said that all other computing classes had the requirement of a C or better in the prerequisite class, effective fall 1992.

Since this is the first semester for the change, students in the class are being given waivers if they do not meet the requirements.

Mike Miller, assistant professor in the computing department and one of three instructors for the class, has asked each of the students to get a waiver so he can at least ask them about their math and computer backgrounds.

"Fundamentally, we are not going to force the C this semester because we are in a transition, and students were not aware of the change," Wallentine said. "But, in the fall they will be aware of the change, and the requirement will be enforced."

Wallentine said it was always assumed that students enrolled in the class had completed College Algebra with a C or better.

Now that the requirement is being enforced, he said the class might be upgraded to be slightly more quantitative oriented.

"We might change the emphasis a little," Miller said. "It might be a bit more math oriented and include deductive reasoning, but if we decide to do that it won't be done until next year."

The class is required for students in the College of Business Administration and the College of Human Ecology and is one of the options for the quantitative math requirement in the College of Arts and Sciences.

Roe v. Wade, two decades later

THE ISSUE

On the 20th anniversary of the Supreme Court's Roe v. Wade decision, barriers continue to exist.

WE SUGGEST

President Clinton should take this opportunity to revoke the Title 10 Act and the ban on the RU-486 pill.

Twenty years ago today, women were given the legal right to obtain an abortion.

In years since then, conservative Republicans, the Rehnquist court and pro-lifers have managed to chip away at that right, bit by bit.

We now have a president who is pro-choice and has publicly declared his intentions once he takes office.

It is about time.

During the campaign, Clinton promised he would revoke Title 10, the act that prohibits federally funded clinics from counseling women about the option of abortion. Clinton also promised to lift the ban that prohibits the drug RU-486, the "abortion pill," from being imported into the United States.

Pro-choice activists have been urging Clinton to remove those bans today, on the 20th anniversary of Roe v. Wade. If not today, then tomorrow. Just as long as this is one campaign promise Clinton doesn't let fall by the wayside.

Title 10 should be revoked. Every woman should have the right to learn about the option of abortion. It is a decision only a woman can make, but it is imperative she is able make an informed decision. It is only fair for all women to be able to learn the facts.

RU-486 has many potential benefits other than abortion. Some studies suggest it could be beneficial in treating breast cancer and a myriad of other diseases. People who suffer from these diseases should be able to benefit from the drug.

RU-486 can help women who do not want the trauma of a surgical abortion.

Yes, abortion is a trauma. There is no denying that. But no woman wants to have an abortion. No woman wants to be put in the position to make that decision. Unfortunately, decisions must be made.

If a woman believes RU-486 would make this decision easier, then so be it. It is no one's business but that woman's, the father, her doctor and, possibly, a priest or other confidant.

So, President Clinton, revoke those bans. The women of America are waiting.

Hey, Saddam, get the message?

SHAWN WOODFORD

"We see, therefore, that war is not merely an act of policy but a true political instrument, a continuation of political intercourse, carried on with other means."

— Carl von Clausewitz

I was having a beer in a local bar the other day with my friend Quail T. Bird, watching reports on the U.S. bombing of Iraq on CNN.

"I know that Saddam is asking for this," I said, "But didn't we kick his butt once already?"

"Oh, yes," said The Quail. "We kicked his butt. It's just that somebody forgot to tell him."

"But just look at that gun camera footage," I replied. "Our bombs are pinpointing their targets. Saddam watches CNN, too. Why isn't he getting the point?"

"And what point is he supposed to be getting?" he asked.

"Huh? What kind of idiot question is that?" I asked, surprised. I took a swig of beer, thinking fast. "Well, everybody knows that we need to make Saddam understand that he has, well, um, to obey the U.N. resolutions, you see, or else we'll, uh, bomb him some more, you know."

"Whoa, I think you just quoted Dan Quayle," said The Quail. "Verbatim."

"Hey!" I was pissed. "The bottom line is that Saddam has to understand that he can't mess around with the United States, that he can't go invading our — I mean the Kuwaiti — oil fields, and that he has to leave the Shiites and Kurds alone!"

"Ah," replied The Quail, with that obnoxiously superior tone of voice of his. "So we're protecting the helpless Shiites and Kurds, just like we're saving the Bosnians from the Serbs in Yugoslavia?"

"Hah! That shows how much you know. If we were stupid enough to send troops into Yugoslavia, they would just get caught up in the guerrilla war going on there. With all of the mountains, it would just be another Vietnam. General Colin Powell says so."

"So, the idea is to avoid getting involved in another Vietnam," The Quail said.

"Yup," I said, confident that I had finally got one on him. But The Quail, who was having one of his periodical lucid moments, pointed out that the United States was doing exactly what it promised it would never do — engage in a war of escalation.

"Each time Iraq violates one of the U.N. resolutions, the United States responds with an act of violence calculated to 'teach them a lesson' or 'send them a message,'" he said.

"Exchanging tit for tat, just like President Lyndon Johnson was accused of doing with Vietnam in the '60s. Well, like the North Vietnamese, Saddam never seems to get the message.

"It's also interesting that the U.S. government seems to think that bombing a few anti-aircraft batteries and a suspected nuclear weapon-related site will somehow convince him, where the wholesale annihilation of half of the Iraqi military in the Gulf War did not."

Now I was confused.

"But, didn't the bombing strategy work out in Grenada, Panama, Libya and in the Gulf War?"

"Strategy?" The Quail laughed in my face. "The United States has no strategy, just a list of potential bomb targets. It has no strategy because it has no coherent foreign policy. You can't have a military strategy unless you have a political goal for it to accomplish.

"Ever since the 'Evil Empire' went belly-up, we've been flying blind. Does anybody remember the 'New World Order?' Hell, even the Cold War policy of containment was nothing more than an excuse to sit back and react to world events. If you want to be honest, the United States hasn't had a rational foreign policy since World War II."

"I don't know about that," was all I could come up with as a response. I looked up at the television. "Maybe things will be different with President Bill."

"Maybe they will," The Quail said, "but I wouldn't hold my breath. You see, the problem isn't only the president, but the American people too. Americans have never understood that there is no such thing as the cheap use of military power.

"War, in any form, means casualties. But because the American people will not stand for American servicemen and women coming back in body bags, and American foreign policy is predicated on the use of force to cover up its lack of focus, the president is forced into using low-risk applications of military power, like bombing.

"Since airpower is an inherently limited means of applying force, it never accomplishes what we want it to, and we get stuck in the cycle of escalation. Catch-22. I sincerely doubt that ol' President Bill can change any of that."

"But if we can't bomb these foreign maniacs like Saddam, then what can we do about them?" I asked in desperation.

"That, my friend, is the $64,000 question. Maybe we ought to consider a foreign policy that doesn't shoot first and ask questions later. Hey, whaddya say we finish up these brewskis and head on over to my house and try out my new Nintendo game 'Nuclear Proliferation?'" The Quail asked.

"Aw, what the hell," I replied, putting on my coat, "I don't have anything better to do."

The view from the Great Wall

Editor's note: K-State journalism professor Paul Parsons is on sabbatical in China this year as a Fulbright Professor at the China School of Journalism. He was the featured speaker Wednesday at the U.S. Embassy in Beijing, where 150 diplomats, Chinese academicians and leaders gathered to watch the Clinton inauguration via satellite.

Parsons had frequently interviewed Clinton during his early years as governor, when Parsons was a United Press International reporter and Associated Press editor in Arkansas.

Below are some excerpts taken from a transcript of his speech:

One of my strongest memories of Bill Clinton is our first interview after he became, at the age of 32, the youngest governor in the United States. I asked if he hoped to become president of the United States someday, and he surprisingly answered yes — surprisingly, since politicians aren't supposed to be so openly ambitious.

Is ambition of that magnitude good or bad?

In terms of good, Clinton has been preparing himself for the presidency all his life. He was a president-in-training, schooling himself on national issues. In the campaign, he astonished people with his grasp of complex issues, both domestic and foreign.

PAUL PARSONS

In terms of bad, ambition has made him the Great Promiser. Bill Clinton loves to be loved. He has an insatiable desire to please, so he says what people want to hear. The danger is, broken promises can lead to public cynicism.

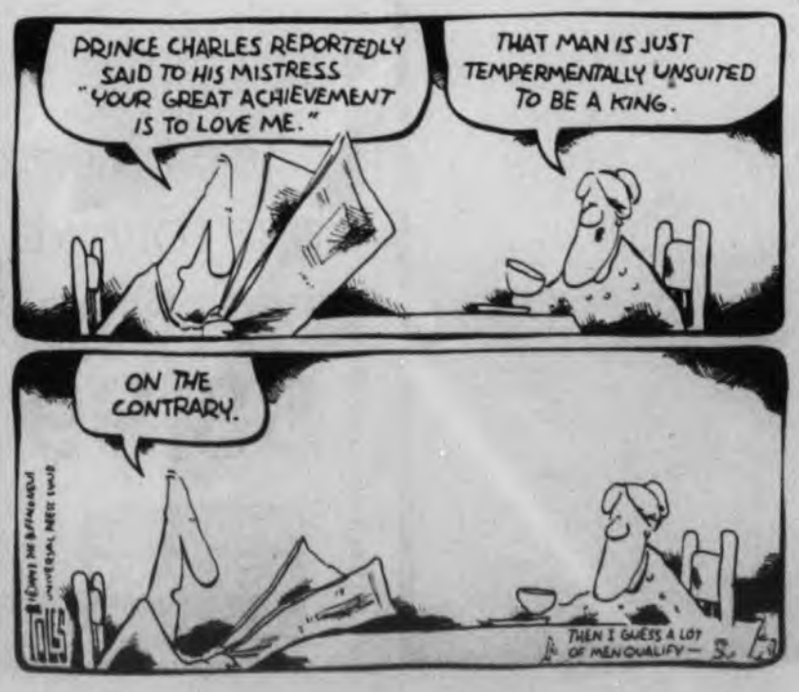
In journalistically describing the new president, I'd start with the word intelligent. Bill Clinton is clearly the most intelligent man I know. He is the closest to a real intellectual in the White House since Woodrow Wilson. Being intelligent, of course, does not mean he will be a successful president. But given the choice of a smart or a not-so-smart president, I'd rather take my chances with an intelligent one.

I also would describe Bill Clinton as a consensus builder. Some ambitious people like to destroy opponents. Clinton likes to appease them. I predict he will overcome political gridlock in Washington by having a publicly cantankerous, privately cordial relationship with the leader of the opposition in Congress, Sen. Robert Dole.

I would also describe him as intensely personal. When Clinton meets someone, he remembers their name. He looks into their eyes. He puts a hand on their shoulder as they talk. I've had it happen to me — he makes you think you're the most important person in his life at that moment.

Upon becoming the nation's youngest governor, he thought he was so wise that the people would instinctively follow him. His ego was the size of Jupiter. And when he ran for re-election, he lost. He was humbled.

What did he learn in 1980? He learned to portray himself as of the people, not above them. Example: The AP accompanied him from one speaking event to another in separate cities. He's always behind schedule, because he's never met a hand he didn't want to shake. Between speeches, he ordered his driver to go 85 mph on the highway, with a state police car clearing the way with lights flashing.



Later, journalists asked Clinton if he viewed himself as above the law. Clinton said no, but that he had been running late. We asked him if everyone who is late for an appointment has the right to break the law. Clinton said no, but he was the governor and the people were waiting for him.

The people of Arkansas didn't like his answer, and they told him so. He publicly apologized for getting too inflated an opinion of himself. His inherent caution stems from his political instincts. His mind works analytically in two dimensions simultaneously — policy and politics. He does not separate what he believes in doing (policy) from what its consequences will be on him (politics).

Regarding most favored nation status for China, Clinton's heart will want to add human rights to the discussion. Clinton's head will want to keep economic issues separate. Will his head win this battle, too, or did the Tiananmen events affect his heart so strongly that he is willing to risk tension with China to advance his core beliefs about supporting democratic tendencies?

On such policy issues as Haiti and China, he will encourage policy debate among top officials. He views himself not as the top of a ladder, but as the hub of a wheel. This means the Clinton administration will often seem "at drift" on policy issues ... Clinton will insist on being the final determiner, and he's notorious for waiting until the final moment to make a policy decision. He believes some "drift" will give him time to hear all arguments and ultimately make the right policy decision that has acceptable political consequences.

Vlad the Impaler — a heart of gold, this guy

Weekend expected there to be a little healthy entrepreneurial marketing on the new hipness of the Dracula legend. T-shirts, beach towels, coffee mugs, pendants bearing the actual family crest of Dracula and containing dirt from Transylvania, things like that.

Apparantly directed at those who want to increase, rather than decrease, their chances of running into a vampire, the pendants feed off of the legend of actual historical figure, Vlad V of Wallachia.

It seems Vlad, better known as Bram Stoker's inspiration for the novel "Dracula", was a 15th century prince from Transylvania with the annoying habit of impaling his enemies on large pointy stakes. Sensitive guy, this Vlad.

Now, two visionaries from Salt Lake City, Joseph Klamt and Dan Filipov have turned this into an elaborate business venture.

Filipov, a Romania immigrant, returned to the country and got permission to take 90 pounds of dirt from Dracula's village, Sighisoara. He then returned and collaborated with Klamt on the pendant idea.

Selling in both the silver edition ($39.95) and the gold edition ($139.95) the pendants are, according to Filipov, meant to improve the count's image in the United States.

"Back in Romania, we really liked this guy, Vlad the Impaler," he said. "Whatever we heard about him was great."

USA Today: Home of serious, hardhitting fashion journalism

It's Thursday, the day after the inauguration, and newspapers around the country are chock full of quotes from Bill Clinton's speech. Weekend couldn't take it anymore and, so, we made a bee-line for page two of the nearest copy of USA Today.

There it was, the real news of the previous day's festivities. The style section.

Let's take a look, shall we?

"Hillary's schoolgirly cobalt blue face-hugging felt was far more flattering that Tipper's tres tipsy broadbrimmed purple wool topper by Stolman."

Oooo. That hurt.

"Lighten up, Hillary! Dark hose may be slimming but they're a bad fit with a light suit for daytime."

Exactly what we were thinking.

The Spy magazine prank o' the month

Those freshman politicos, always eager to please.

Spy magazine, well-known for the hilarious pranks that it has pulled off in the past, just came up with another doozy.

Setting up the fictional "Congressional Supply Store," the magazine sent off order books to all the new members of Congress. The catalogue attractively displayed such enticing items such as the T-shirt that read, "My Dad was elected to Congress and all I got was this lousy T-shirt," congressional earmuffs, a map of senatorial hideaways, and hi-ball glasses "just like Sam Rayburn used to use."

The February issue of Spy contains the article, titled "Parliament of Suckers," which describes the prank and politicians who fell for it.

ELVIS SEEN ON STAMP!

Fans stuck on the King can now stick him on their mail

Elvis is everywhere.

His ghost has been spotted on the grounds of his former home in Graceland. He has been seen in shopping malls, in truck stops, on Al Bundy's T-shirt, in clouds from 30,000 feet and even in root cellars.

There is one spot, however, where he had never been spotted — the post office.

That is, until now.

On Jan. 8, the U. S. Post Office released the official Elvis Presley stamp in commemoration of the man, his myth and his birthday.

The stamp is one of two that were designed in memory of the King. The one selected by the public portrays Elvis during his younger years. The other, which showed Elvis in his later years, was rejected and will not be printed.

With a total of 500 million in print, the stamp, like Elvis, is everywhere. The Manhattan post office got 68,000 of the 500 million printed.

So, Elvis may even show up in your mailbox.

The following of the man is immense, and for his millions of fans worldwide there simply is no one better. For one devoted fan, Matt FitzGerald, junior in human development and family studies, Elvis has even popped up in his dreams.

"On Jan. 7, 1991, he came to me in a dream. He also came to five of my friends in their dreams. We then all mysteriously came together and road-tripped the 10 hours to Graceland for his birthday, " he said.

FitzGerald's birthday is January 9, the day after Elvis' birthday.

This was the first day the two Elvis stamps were unveiled, and the first chance for fans to vote.

FitzGerald, who has been to Graceland four times, said he made his decision on the basis of his feelings for the King.

"I voted for the younger Elvis. When the stamps were unveiled at Graceland, there were a lot of rumors floating around about his drug use. Everyone felt that the younger version portrayed what he was all about," he said.

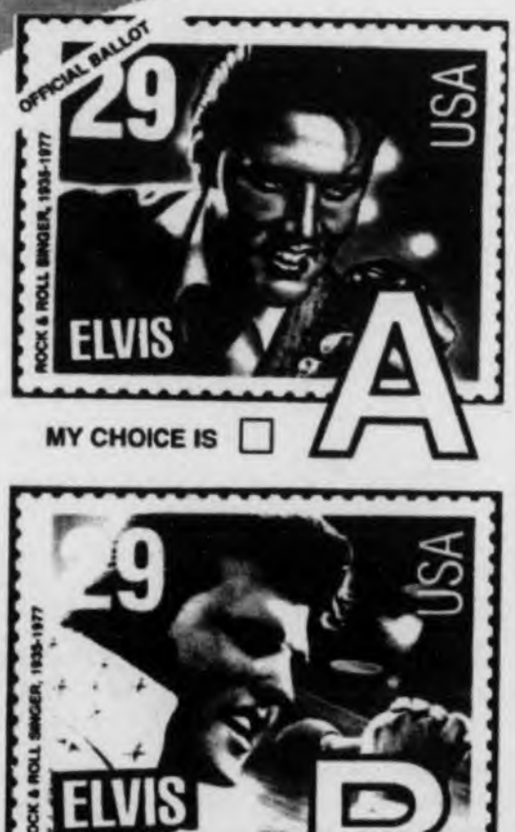
The prize for Elvis on the brain, and other places, however must go to Craig Seiler, senior in engineering. Seiler, who is not only a huge Elvis fan but also FitzGerald's roommate, said he feels he is the King's spiritual lovechild and has positive proof that he carries with him everywhere.

"I have a birthmark on my butt of the TCB and the flash," Seiler said.

TCB with a flash was Elvis' trademark motto. It stands for "Takin' Care of Business" and is depicted throughout Graceland and the surrounding complex.

Seiler, who has been an Elvis fan since the fifth grade, once stood on the bar at Rock-A-Belly Deli's bar in Aggieville in an Elvis costume and sang the King's hit "Suspicious Minds."

After years of following the King and two pilgrimages to Graceland, Seiler has a rather profound theory on why Elvis fans abound.



"He's the spirit of rock 'n' roll, and he's the spirit of everything we want to be, but are afraid to be," he said.

Be you a fan, a spiritual lovechild, or just someone who trips over the King in your root cellar, his memory lives on. Dead or alive, the life and the music of Elvis Aaron Presley will, like rock 'n' roll, never die, FitzGerald and Seiler said.

"I don't think he's alive in the physical sense, but he's alive in all of us. Kind of like Santa or the Easter Bunny," FitzGerald said.

"His music has the ability to touch everyone's life."

Seagal cooks up more action in 'Under Siege'

CHRISTINA CARBAJAL
Collegian

Chalk up another one for action movie master Steven Seagal, who retains his seek-and-destroy image in the film "Under Siege."

This time around, Seagal is stationed on the battleship U.S.S. Missouri and challenges not one, but two bad guys, played by Gary Busey and Tommy Lee Jones.

Seagal dons his Navy whites, not as an officer, but as the ship's cook, and thwarts the enemies' plans to take over the battleship in an act of revenge against the government.

Busey and Jones initiate their plot for their own reasons. Busey's character is bitter after not receiving a promotion, and Jones wants to get back at the government for trying to kill him when he failed to perform his military duties.

The two enjoy themselves as they overthrow the crew and try to convince the government that they are just crazy men, who don't really know what they're doing. They laugh gleefully like two little boys playing with toys, but the result could be nuclear destruction.

Busey continues to make his mark as a bad guy, who calmly and ruthlessly kills anyone who gets in his way.

Jones also accomplishes his bad-guy character, but with more flair. He rants and raves to the government about revenge and loss of his beliefs and hopes about the United States. This insanity ploy is just an act to throw off the big brass, but there is still an undercurrent of instability in the character's personality.

Through all this terrorism and espionage, Seagal's character manages, of course, to slowly gain control of the battleship and take care of both Busey and Jones.

Seagal fans will enjoy the return of his deep, raspy voice and tough-guy attitude. But don't look for any acting deeper than that.

Director Andrew Davis helps make up for this lack of acting with some new — if not somewhat graphic — ways to dispose of the enemy throughout the movie. Davis, who directed "Above the Law," is not new to Seagal's movies, giving the audience all the action they can take.

Huskers looking for 1st Big 8 win

"Nebraska hasn't been playing as well as a lot of people thought they would be."

DANA ALTMAN
K-State coach

STEVEN ROCK
Collegian

The Nebraska Cornhuskers, looking to post their first conference win of the season, will welcome K-State at 7:05 Saturday night at the Bob Devaney Sports Center.

The Wildcats are looking to snap Nebraska's 14-game home winning streak by riding the momentum generated in a tough six-point loss to the No. 1-ranked Jayhawks Monday night.

"That game showed us that we can play with anybody in the nation," Cat point guard Anthony Beane said. "It gave us a lot of confidence.

"If we continue to play hard, we're going to be a lot tougher than most people think."

And Beane said the Wildcats can't look at the Kansas game — in which K-State was leading by eight at halftime — as a game the Cats should have won.

"We don't have time to get negative on ourselves," he said. "We've got 11 more Big Eight games coming up."

Nebraska has suffered road losses to both Oklahoma and Oklahoma State. The Huskers, 12-5, jumped out to a 7-0 start by posting victories against the likes of Colgate, Citadel and Appalachian State.

Since then, Nebraska is just 5-5 with more blowout wins against weaker non-conference opponents — Fordham, Eastern Illinois and Southern Utah.

In its last game, Nebraska beat 1-17 Sacramento State 86-70.

"Nebraska hasn't been playing as well as maybe a lot of people thought they would be," Cat coach Dana Altman said. "I think they will look at this game as one they have to have."

Nebraska's rocky start may be because of the loss of many key players from a year ago. Although three starters return from last year's team, Nebraska lost two of its top five scorers in Carl Hayes and Dapreis Owens.

In all, only five players from last year's team returned.

"It just takes a little longer to mesh that many people with those returners," Altman said.

But Nebraska does return Eric Piatkowski and Derrick Chandler, the team's leading scorer and rebounder. And junior guard Jamar Johnson, also a returner, leads the team's upbeat offense that is averaging more than 84 points a game.

The Huskers will have to get past the Big Eight's leading defense if they are to pick up their first conference win of the season. K-State is giving up an average of just 66.5 points through 13 games this season.

In Big Eight play, the Cats rank second with a 70.3 points-per-game defensive average. After three conference games a year ago, the Wildcats were giving up more than 91 points a contest.

Indeed, it's not the K-State defense that has Altman worried.

"I'm concerned about our offense," he said. "I realize we have to score, but I'm more worried about handling the basketball.

"We're careless."

The Wildcats have a total of 216 turnovers thus far in the season, an average of nearly 17 per game.

The game gives K-State a chance to avenge last season's loss in Lincoln. Nebraska put together runs of 22-0 and 16-0 en route to a 91-62 blowout.

K-State to host weekend meet

Percell Gaskins, K-State high jumper, takes to the air during practice Thursday afternoon in Ahearn Field House. The Wildcat track team will be host to an indoor track invitational Friday and Saturday.

Rovelto says team has more talent than last 5 years

BRIAN ANDERSON
Collegian

K-State's interim track coach Cliff Rovelto will open the 1993 indoor season this weekend with high hopes for his team as it plays host to the KSU Invitational at Ahearn Field House.

Rovelto, who took charge of the program after former coach John Capriotti resigned to take a job at Nike last semester, said this is the best squad K-State has had for a a long time.

"I think we have more national-caliber athletes than ever before," Rovelto said. "Definitely, we have more of those athletes since I've been here."

Rovelto has been at K-State for five years.

"We have better than half a dozen athletes that could be Big Eight champions," he said.

Rovelto said the track team's strengths are its distance runners and the work ethic.

"We have much more range of distance runners," he said. "We haven't had those people in the past. It should make us a strong indoors team.

"The kids are looking forward to running this weekend," Rovelto said. "The team has a strong work ethic. They are a notch above from last year's team.

"They have been training well, and I expect to see some good performances."

Rovelto said he also expects the team to do well in the men's high jump.

"We have three guys that can jump over seven feet," he said. "Ed Broxterman, Itai Margalit and Percell Gaskins are phenomenal. These guys are as good as R.D. Cogswell."

Cogswell won three Big Eight high-jump titles before graduating last year.

Rovelto said if spectators like to see athletes jump, they should watch the K-State jumpers Saturday about 1 p.m. — especially Gaskins.

"He'll shock a lot of people when he jumps," Rovelto said of Gaskins, who is also member of the football team. "He has an amazing ability to jump."

Broxterman jumped more than seven feet last year in high school, and Margalit was a top leaper for the Israeli national team.

Rovelto is the only full-time coach for the track team. He has three former K-State athletes working with him.

Former cross country all-American Todd Trask is working with the distance runners, Karen McGaughey helps him with administrative work, and decathlete Steve Fritz is helping the throwers.

Fritz said Christy Ward could do well in the shot put while the rest of the throwers gain experience.

"From all the entries, I'll be surprised if she doesn't throw well," Fritz said. "As the season progresses, who knows what can happen? Everyone looks all right."

The teams coming to the invitational are the men's and women's squads of Oklahoma State, Kansas, Pittsburg State, Southwest Missouri State and the University of Toledo.

The invitational begins at 9 a.m. today as the men's team competes in the pentathlon. The first event is the 60-meter hurdles, followed by the long jump, shot put, high jump and the 1000-meter run.

The women's pentathlon is at 8:30 a.m. Saturday. While the women finish the pentathlon, field events start with women's shot put at 12:30 p.m. The track events start at 2:30 p.m.

Lady Cats looking to end skid

TONYA FOSTER
Collegian

The Lady Cats will take their games — and their losing streak — to Oklahoma this weekend.

Tonight, K-State will face Oklahoma State at 7 p.m. at the Gallagher-Iba Arena in Stillwater. The Lady Cats face Oklahoma Sunday in Norman.

The Lady Cats have not won since Jan. 3. Since then, K-State has lost four straight, all in the Big Eight.

The Cowgirls of Oklahoma State are 15-2 and 3-0 in the Big Eight. Nationally, they are ranked No. 22. K-State has not defeated Oklahoma State at Stillwater in seven years.

Oklahoma State is led by 5-foot 11-inch center Lisa McGill.

"She is the best post-playing center in the Big Eight," Lady Cat coach Susan Yow said.

McGill leads the conference in rebounds with an average of 9.3 boards per game. She is also second leading scorer in the Big Eight with a 19.5 points-per-game average.

"We need to contain Lisa McGill," Lady Cat guard Kelly Moylan said.

Moylan said shutting down McGill will force shots from the outside, enabling the Lady Cats to put defensive pressure on the ball.

"We know we can play defense," she said. "If you play defense night in and night out, that's what can keep you in the game."

Yow said K-State can beat both Oklahoma State and Oklahoma if her players do two things.

"If we learn to take better care of the ball and if we get back the defensive intensity that we had before break, we can win," Yow said.

The Cowgirls start three freshmen and one sophomore.

Despite the lack of experience, the team is still second in the Big Eight.

"We're really pleasantly surprised right now," Oklahoma State coach Dick Halterman said. "When we started practicing in November, there really was no question of how good this bunch would become, but we didn't think we would be this good this early."

McGill's leadership has been a key to the team's success.

"The only pressure I felt was the pressure of providing leadership," McGill said. "I've always been the type of player who just went out on the floor and did what had to be done. But this year I know I had to be more outspoken to help the freshmen."

Oklahoma's top scorer and rebounder is 6-2 forward Angi Guffy. She averages 14.3 points and 6.4 rebounds per game.

"Angi Guffy is a tremendous player and the key for them," Yow said.

Oklahoma is 7-6 overall and 2-2 in the conference. But Yow said she thinks the team is much better than its record.

"I picked them as the dark horse to win the conference," she said.

Both teams have defeated Iowa State, now 2-14. The Lady Cats lost to the Cyclones 67-61.

KANSAS
ARMY NATIONAL GUARD
Americans at their best.

You may not know our name, but we've been a cornerstone of America for 125 years.

We wouldn't be a bit surprised if you didn't recognize our company name—Cargill. But we've been in business since 1865, helping America's farmers feed the world.

We're a company built on talented people. Our particular skills include marketing; handling and processing bulk commodities; risk management; strategic capital investment; and taking an innovative approach to generating cost efficiencies.

We apply those skills to a broad range of businesses. Today, Cargill handles commodities as diverse as scrap metal and molasses, cocoa and fertilizer, cotton and ocean freight, and wheat and orange juice. Our operations vary from flour mills to futures trading, from meat-packing plants to mining salt, and from steel mills to selling seed. Cargill, its subsidiaries and affiliates, employ more than 63,000 people worldwide.

If you have a good academic background, above-average communication skills and a desire for advancement, we'd like to talk to you. Career opportunities exist for talented, ambitious people from diverse educational backgrounds.

Fire's cause disputed by tenants, manager

"Oh, you can smell it around here," Sean Rhoten said. "I've never had a leak, but every once in awhile you can smell them."

John Farley said he has tried to report the problem several times.

"I've called the health department," he said. "They said there was no county ordinance that would legally allow them to do anything."

Judy Willingham, environmental supervisor for the Health Department, said most regulations deal with just the mobile home parks.

"The licenses for mobile home parks come from planning and zoning," Willingham said. "They have to meet certain criteria to get the license, but that deals with stuff outside the trailer."

She said there are city ordinances that apply to mobile homes, but not for mobile homes outside of the city.

"That's probably true," said Monty Wedel, director of city planning and zoning. "I suppose if it we're inside the city they could condemn it. Even if it was, it wouldn't apply to inside the mobile home."

Pat Collins, assistant rural fire chief, said if there was a fire hazard outside the trailer, then it can be inspected.

"If there is a call, then we try and work with them and try to talk to the owner and get him to fix it," Collins said. "The law doesn't allow us to just go in and make them fix it."

The cause of the fire has yet to be determined by the fire department. Fountain said it was not caused by a gas leak.

"It was caused because the pilots were out, and he had been turning the stove on from the main," Fountain said.

He also said he has not had any other leaks reported recently. Molzahn, though, said she knows there was a leak.

"You could definitely smell it," she said.

She and Carrington have gotten a lawyer, and are considering going to court. The Farley's have said they will go to court.

"Randy said he would evict us if we talked about it," John Farley said. "I don't care, cause we're looking for a new place."

On Thursday, the Farley's were served with an eviction notice, after the health department inspected their trailer.

"They found sewage underneath the trailer," Kristie Farley said. "She told Randy that if he didn't get it fixed, she was coming out tomorrow with a videocamera.

That afternoon, Fountain served them with an eviction notice.

"Guess what the reason for the eviction said." John Farley said. "It was for health reasons."

John Farley said he called Willingham to see if that was a valid reason for an eviction. She said it was not.

"That's just going to show the judge that he's just mad that we reported it, and that we talked about the gas," John Farley said. "We are not moving until the law comes and makes us leave."

Rathbone given award

a model program," Switzer said. "Without Dean Rathbone we would not have the kind of program that we have."

Recruitment and retention are equally important, Rathbone said.

"We have to do both to be successful," he said. "If we do these two R's and then get the students into the work force, we are a success."

The program includes scholarships based on financial need, peer tutoring and counseling, internship, co-op and job placement assistance and four minority engineering organizations.

"The reason the recognition was given was because of Rathbone's longstanding support of minority education, which is demonstrated through the Minority Education Program," said Mordean Taylor-Archer, assistant provost for multicultural affairs and a member of the advisory committee.

"His program is a model for other schools to follow," Taylor-Archer said.

Minority recruitment is important, because it lets people know what opportunities are available, Rathbone said.

"I really feel there are an awful lot of opportunities in engineering for minorities and women. For too long this has been an all-white male occupation," Rathbone said. "There is talent out there that is not being used, and I want the profession to take advantage of that talent."

Rathbone said there are still not as many minority and female students enrolled in the college as he would like.

Reader having trouble staying

DEAR CASSANDRA,

I am a freshman living in the residence halls, and I don't have any friends or family to go to. I feel very frightened and lonely because I can't get adjusted to college life. I have tried to make friends, but no one seems to want to talk to me. I am considering dropping out and going back home if things don't improve this semester. What can I do to help my situation? I need some guidance in my life and someone to turn to in times of trouble. Please help me! I am very desperate. Thank you very much.

Sincerely,
Lonely, the one and only

DEAR LONELY (BUT NOT THE ONLY),

Buck up, young sportsman. Things are going to get better, impossible though it may seem.

First things first. Quitting school won't help you make any friends. The old saying is true: You can't run away from your problems.

Now, take out a piece of paper. Write down at least five activities that you enjoy or would like to try. Get a campus directory and see if there are any such student organizations. Find out when the next meeting is and go.

One reason you might be having trouble meeting friends is that you might be trying too hard. Just focus on having easy conversations with people. Friendships are built, not created, and conversations are the building blocks.

Here are a few conversation tips: 1) You have two ears and one mouth for a reason 2) Most people love to talk about themselves 3) People like to hear their own names.

DEAR CASSANDRA,

Last semester, I wrote this guy a few letters that expressed some of what I feel. I've never met him before, but he does give me these looks sometimes. I wish I just had the nerve to say something. I didn't sign the letters so he doesn't know who sent them, but I kind of wish he did. Then again, I would be kind of embarrassed even though the letters were just friendly, not gross.

I wish something like what happened to Newt (Jan. 19) would happen to me. Maybe this guy will leave his cap behind instead. He always wears one. Then again, he never takes it off. Oh well, my question is how do you approach someone like this? It was probably a total mistake to write the letters, huh?

Wanting to Talk But I Can't

DEAR WANTING,

Here is how you approach someone if you want to meet them. First, approach them. Second, introduce yourself.

In your case, it could happen like this, "Hello, I'm Wanting to Talk But I Can't. I noticed that you always wear baseball caps. You know, I once watched a baseball game on television."

After your cap-wearing beau responds, then you could bring up the letters. If he has been giving you "these looks" then I doubt he'd be surprised if you met him. Sister, we both know men are open books. Trust your feminine wiles.

What the heck, talk to him. If you don't, you'll probably spend the rest of your life living with regret.

Lecture stresses King's dream

continue the ideas of such an intelligent and articulate individual.

"I think it's important that we look at what was said and done by Dr. King and others of that time. To see, first of all, the development of those ideas," she said. "Second of all, how can we apply it today? And thirdly, where are we?"

She asked if the students had faced the issues King originally addressed and whether society has met his ideals.

King and others like Rosa Parks were heroes, Terrell said, for the peaceful civil-rights movement has kept American society from suffering the same problems of Bosnia, Northern Ireland and South Africa.

"We need only to look around to realize that if ethnic conflict is allowed to fester, you can wind up with streets full of blood," Terrell said. "And while yet we have violence in this country, we have nothing on the scale which equals those situations."

Speaking of the civil-rights movement, Terrell compared King and Parks to Gandhi. They refused to use violence, didn't back down and demanded equal treatment.

Terrell paraphrased King, using his famous line, "Let us be dissatisfied," to sum up what King would say if he were here today. "Let us not think that we can rest on our laurels. Let us not pat ourselves on the back. Let us not slow down."

Continuing the theme of change, Terrell related how race relations are becoming as important as using a computer. Anyone who graduates and cannot overcome prejudice will be poorly prepared.

"The world you students are about to enter will be diverse. It will be multi-hued. It will be multi-ethnic. It will not be the world of 20 or 30 years ago."

She cited statistics showing that within the next century, the white population will be the minority in the United States.

Prejudice must be fought, Terrell said.

"We all have a monster living inside of us, and that monster is prejudice. Each of us has prejudice living inside of us. That monster, if left alone, could destroy everything that Americans have built up."

Focusing on college campuses, she said violence and racism are more common because students are entering a new world where they don't have parents telling them what to do.

"One-fourth of all minorities have experienced some form of harassment or assault during the last academic year based on prejudice," Terrell said. "If you ask the gay students, you get an even higher number."

Terrell touched further on society's violence by saying how many people resolve their conflicts through violence. This needs to end, and people need to work together to end the violence, she said.

"Start within yourselves and start today," she said. "Because the world and the nation no longer gives us the luxury of sitting around quietly among those who look only like ourselves."

Residence hall rates to increase

"When you adjust for prices, you also need to adjust for quality,"

EDWIN OLSON

KRISTI HUMSTON
Collegian

The cost of living in a residence hall has gone up once again.

In December, the Kansas Board of Regents approved a 9.8 percent increase in rates for K-State residence halls. It will go into effect next fall.

Chuck Werring, director of the Department of Housing and Dining Services, said K-State is still offering the lowest price in the Big Eight.

He said the department is run as an auxiliary enterprise and receives no funds from the state, county or city. Thus, all of the money needed to maintain facilities and pay for staff comes directly from the students.

While the percent increase is higher than the Consumer Price Index, other things have to be taken into consideration, Edwin Olson, associate professor of economics, said.

"When you adjust for prices, you also need to adjust for quality," Olson said. "If the quality of housing has increased, you can't directly compare price increases to increases in the Consumer Price Index."

One reason for the increase is the residence halls have faced a decline in numbers for the past three to four years, Werring said.

This is because the number of high school graduating seniors has decreased — having an effect on the number of first-time freshmen and, in return, the rates, he said.

However, the numbers are slowly going back up, and Werring said he thinks they've seen the bottom.

It's estimated that 83 percent of the residence halls are currently occupied, and figures for next year are predicting 85 percent, he said.

Robert Burgess, assistant director of business operations for the department, said the budget is determined by looking at the anticipated number of residents, possible renovations for the older

Iraq denies firing on U.S. warplanes

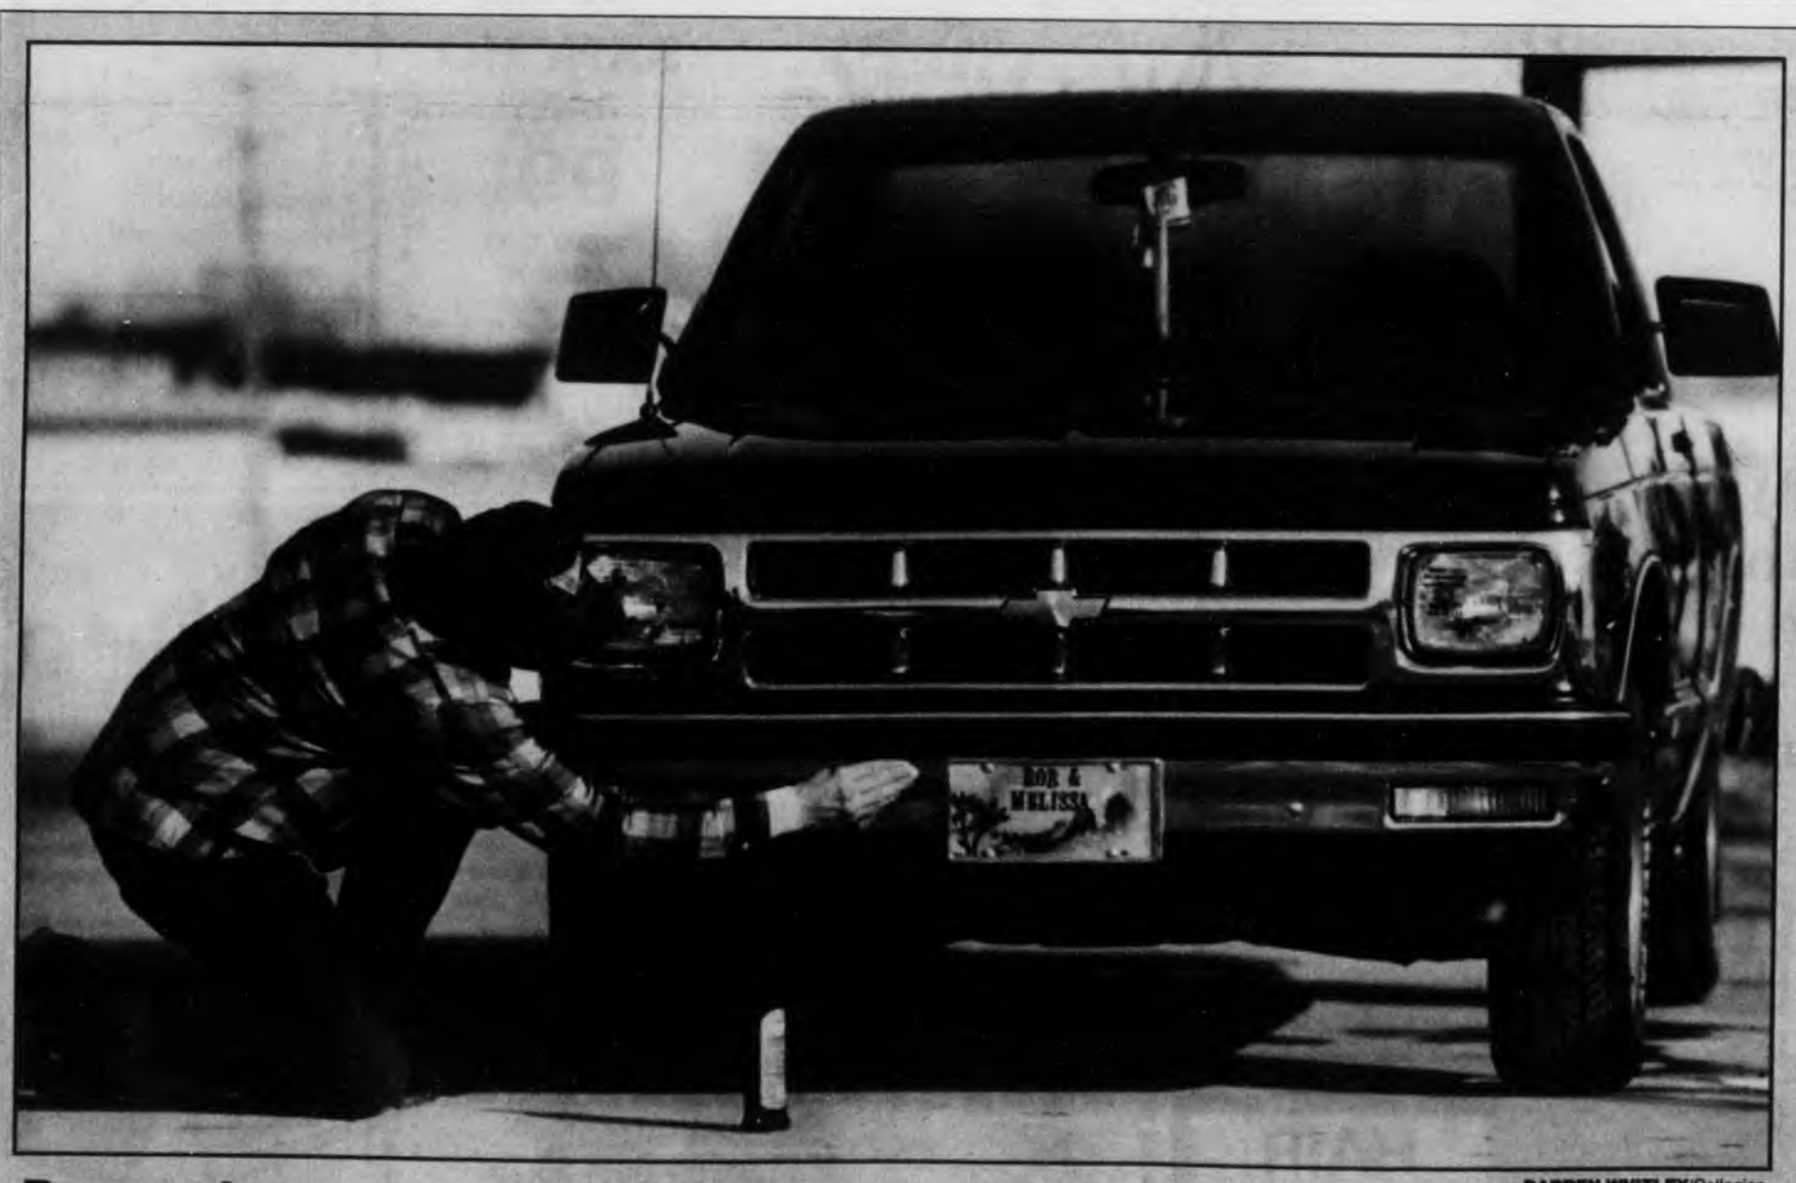
ASSOCIATED PRESS

BAGHDAD, Iraq — Iraq denied its anti-aircraft batteries fired at U.S. warplanes again and insisted on Sunday that the cease-fire it declared last week remained in effect.

The claims came a day after U.S. warplanes attacked Iraqi missile sites for the third consecutive day.

In Washington, Defense Secretary Les Aspin said it was not certain the Iraqis opened fire Saturday night in the southern "no fly" zone, but he stressed the pilot thought he was shot at.

U.S. military spokesmen stood by the report that American planes were fired on, and a second pilot on the aircraft carrier USS Kitty Hawk reported seeing gun flashes during the Saturday night incident.



Aspin also reported that there was "some indication" Iraqi troops were preparing new sites for anti-aircraft missiles in southern Iraq, despite allied warnings to keep such weapons out of the air exclusion zone.

"It's a little soon to make definitive judgments," he added.

Appearing on CBS's "Face the Nation," Aspin said recent Iraqi action "was not proof" that Saddam Hussein's government was trying to test the new U.S. administration, or that it had necessarily broken its own cease-fire.

Iraq's information minister, Hamed Yousef Hummadi, called for "pragmatic, businesslike discussion" with the United States, and government-run newspapers invited President Clinton to settle disputes through dialogue.

NEWS DIGEST

▶JUNCTION CITY MAN STABBED TO DEATH

COUNCIL GROVE (AP) — A Junction City man was stabbed to death early Saturday along a road in Morris County, authorities said.

Morris County Attorney Robert Daub said Scotty R. Adam, 18, of Council Grove, was charged with second-degree murder Saturday in the death of Scott Sanders, 19.

Daub said the stabbing took place on Kansas Highway 57, about three miles north of Council Grove. He said the incident is being investigated by the Morris County Sheriff's Department and the Kansas Bureau of Investigation.

▶GOSPEL CREATOR DIES OF ALZHEIMER'S

CHICAGO (AP) — Thomas A. Dorsey, who blended blues, ragtime and church songs into a creation he called gospel music, died Saturday of Alzheimer's disease. He was 93.

Dorsey wrote such gospel classics as "Peace in the Valley" and "Take My Hand, Precious Lord." He also wrote more than 2,000 blues songs, including the 1928 hit, "It's Tight Like That."

He contributed about 1,000 songs to the genre he created.

Dorsey's work reached a wider audience in 1983 through the documentary film, "Say Amen, Somebody," and in 1992 he was honored with the National Academy of Recording Arts & Sciences National Trustees Award.

Thurgood Marshall dies at 84

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — Retired Justice Thurgood Marshall, the most prominent civil rights attorney of his generation and the first black to serve on the U.S. Supreme Court, died Sunday of heart failure. He was 84.

Marshall was a hearty, blunt-spoken, irascible figure — from the outset a liberal activist who looked out for disadvantaged Americans. In his later years on an increasingly conservative court, Marshall often spoke out in frustration and dissent.

He had been in failing health for the past several years and left the court in 1991. He died at 2 p.m. at Bethesda Naval Medical Center in suburban Maryland, according to Toni House, Supreme Court spokeswoman.

President Clinton said he was "deeply saddened" by Marshall's death.

"He was a giant in the quest for human rights and equal opportunity in the whole history of our country," Clinton said in a statement. "Every American should be grateful for the contributions he made as an advocate and as a justice of the United States Supreme Court."

As a lawyer for the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, Marshall argued and won the landmark Brown v. Board of Education desegregation case before the court in 1954. In all, Marshall argued 33 cases before the court. He won 29.

"His victories went beyond those pertaining to race," said A. Leon Higginbotham, chief judge emeritus of the U.S. Court of Appeals for the 3rd Circuit. "For if he had not won the Brown case, the door of equal opportunity would have been more tightly closed also to women, other minorities and the poor."

Laurence Tribe, constitutional scholar and professor, Harvard Law School, called Marshall "the greatest lawyer in the 20th century."

Marshall, the great-grandson of a slave, was born July 2, 1908, in Baltimore, the son of William and Norma Marshall. He grew up in comfortable but not affluent circumstances. His father was a head waiter in private clubs. His mother was

Teachers learn to teach

JENNIFER SWANSON
Collegian

The Kansas Foundation for Agriculture in the Classroom will offer a course this summer for kindergarten through grade 12 teachers who want to learn how to teach their students about agriculture.

Integrating Agriculture into the Classroom is a three-hour, graduate-level course administered through Continuing Education.

KFAC, a non-profit organization with the purpose of educating youth about agriculture, has offered the course since 1985, Sharon Tally, KFAC administrator, said.

"Everyone eats and uses agricultural products every day," Tally said. "Yet, we often have little idea of how they are produced, processed and distributed to us.

"The Agriculture in the Classroom courses are designed to help teachers learn about the agricultural food industry and then find ways to use that information in their daily teaching of all subjects."

Four two-week courses will be offered this summer in Hays, Wichita, Manhattan and Kansas City.

The four different sites make the course accessible to more teachers, Tally said.

Faculty from K-State, Fort Hays State University, Wichita State University and members of the agribusiness community serve as instructors, Tally said.

Undergraduate students may look forward to the day when they will graduate, but it's getting harder and harder to find a job in the "real world."

"The real world always sounds glamorous, but school doesn't prepare you for how hard it really is out there," alumna Betsy Hidalgo said.

Hidalgo graduated in May 1992. She starts her dream job at Intertec Publishing Co. today.

You have to pay your dues in the real world, as well as in college, Hidalgo said. You have to work your way up.

After graduation, Hidalgo's first job was at Sprint. She got the job through a temporary agency, she said.

"Because of the recession, no one was hiring," Hidalgo said.

Jason Black graduated from K-State with a marketing degree in May 1992. Black works at Lady Foot Locker as a management trainee.

"It's very difficult. I know some people who are still out of work and graduated two years ago," Black said.

"There are few management jobs, and for students who just graduated, a small salary," alumnus Tom Meier said.

Meier graduated in December 1992 with a degree in hotel and restaurant management. He is now looking for a job in Wichita while he attends Wichita State University to get his master's degree in business administration.

"Companies are looking for people with a higher degree," said Meir.

Some other ideas for undergraduates are to intern and to join student organizations. It is a great opportunity to start making connections and networking, Hidalgo said.

Career Planning and Placement Center in Holtz Hall also offers workshops to help students prepare to start their job search.

Some of the workshops offered are resume building, job search strategies, cooperative education orientations, resume critique sessions, winning interviews and orientation to job search.

Schedules for the workshops are available in Holtz Hall. Notices also appear in the Collegian.

Trip provides glimpse of Russia

Students, professors witness failing economy, loving people

"I didn't feel as alienated as I thought I would. It felt like we were communicating even though we couldn't talk to each other."

JULIE CHARTIER
SENIOR IN HISTORY

LAURA HEIDE
Collegian

The people of Russia are experiencing life on the edge. The country no longer has an economic life force. People resort to a life of crime to survive. The honest and hard working are punished.

These are the views of both professors and students who visited Russia during Christmas break.

"For the average Russian, the economy has hit a brick wall. They are terrified about tomorrow," John Daly, professor of Soviet history, said.

"Only the bureaucrats, ones with foreign language skills or money saved on the side, as well as people with no moral scruples are making it."

This was Daly's second visit to Russia in the past year. The conditions are much worse now than they were during his visit in July, he said.

"Everywhere you look there are petty traders, prostitutes, street urchins and hustlers," Dave Kromm, professor of geography, said.

The average Russians must sell their belongings to buy food.

"You are constantly and unendingly accosted by everyone selling things," he said.

Shawn Woodford, graduate student in history, bought a military coat adorned with three World War Two medals.

"These medals were literally paid for in blood. And now widows are selling military items to black marketeers for next to nothing. Then they are selling it to you," Woodford said.

While in St. Petersburg, Woodford witnessed a rally in Palace Square. One placard stated in English "I want to follow in the footsteps of Hitler."

"As people get more disenchanted they are going to start turning to people who say they can put things straight," he said.

The people want an ending to this and the blame may eventually be put on someone, he said.

"The people are much more desperate than they were six months ago. There is definitely an undercurrent of menace," Daly said.

Despite hard times, the values of the Russian people have not changed.

"What hasn't changed is that Russian people are still the most warm and loving people on this planet," Krumm said.

Julie Chartier, senior in history, recalled the time their Russian bus driver took her to a bar for a Pepsi. He couldn't speak English, and she couldn't speak Russian.

"I didn't feel as alienated as I thought I would. It felt like we were communicating even though we couldn't talk to each other," she said.

The group visited Zagorsk, just north of Moscow, as well as the Alexander Nevskii monastery at Lavra. These are two of the most important religious centers in Russia.

"This was the second Christmas they had since the fall of Communism. It was a religious experience just to watch the Russians take their religion so seriously," Diane Arthur, junior in broadcast journalism and history, said.

Education is also taken very seriously in Russia.

Their literacy rate is 100 percent. However Russians will have to start paying for their education. Daly said he had not spoken to anyone who thinks better times are around the corner.

"I'm just happy to realize the long dark nightmare forced upon it is over. They can begin to recover what was stolen by the biggest bunch of criminals in the 20th century," he said.

Among the sites the group visited were the Kremlin, Red Square, a Russian opera, circus and ballet.

'Scent' earns top Golden Globe

ASSOCIATED PRESS

BEVERLY HILLS, Calif. — "Scent of a Woman" won a surprise Golden Globe for best dramatic motion picture of 1992 as well as honors for best acting by Al Pacino and best screenplay.

Emma Thompson was acclaimed best dramatic actress for "Howards End" and Clint Eastwood was honored as best director for his western, "Unforgiven."

The 50th presentation of the Hollywood Foreign Press Association's awards on Saturday spread the movie and television trophies liberally, and no winner dominated the event.

"Scent of a Woman," the story of a blind, retired Army officer, overcame "A Few Good Men," "Unforgiven," "The Crying Game" and "Howards End" in the dramatic motion picture competition.

"I am surprised, but I will go on — as long as there's life," Pacino said in accepting his award for the film that also earned the writing award for Bo Goldman.

The Golden Globes are viewed closely for indications of what's to come at the Academy Awards in March.

ABC's blue-collar sitcom "Roseanne" and the HBO special "Stalin" tied for top television honors with three apiece.

DB92 diversifying to increase audience

CRIS ARY
Collegian

Diversity is the key word for the new programming at DB92 this semester, and the new shows that are lined up for the student radio station are aimed at a variety of audiences.

"We try to get the best programming that we can," said Joe Montgomery, station manager.

According to Doug Chapman, junior in computer science and assistant music director for DB92, the new programming will hopefully attract more listeners.

"It's expanding our audience," he said.

One of the new shows that has Eric Melin, music director for DB92, excited is "History Lesson." It will be featured every Thursday from 9 to 10 p.m.

"A definite show for music fans," Melin said.

"History Lesson" will feature a different disc jockey each week to highlight a different band, Chapman said.

Featured on the show are alternative bands that have been around for about 10 years.

"It's a way for our listeners to find out about the earlier works of bands that are well-known now that started out in college radio," he said.

The show will concentrate on the older music of the bands and their history, Melin said.

"It's another way to let people in on our programming," he said.

Another new program will debut on Saturdays, from 11 a.m. to 1 p.m. DB92 will feature folk and bluegrass music.

"It's something the area's needed for a long time," Melin said.

Haitians deserve hearings

THE ISSUE

Haitian refugees are being sent back to their home without the benefit of an asylum hearing.

WE SUGGEST

President Clinton reconsider his decision to keep this policy and allow hearings for all refugees.

One week before Bill Clinton was to be inaugurated, he faced tough questions concerning an anticipated invasion.

The troops numbered 250,000, sources said, and they were a determined lot, determined to launch a sweeping strike with an immense naval armada.

Clinton's cautious predecessor hadsent off Coast Guard vessels with a mission to circle the island and halt the forces before they could get close to our pristine beaches.

It's a surprising series of actions for a little island called Haiti.

The prophecies have been alarming — AIDS will increase exponentially, jobs will be lost, and the United States will get a global reputation as some sort of sanctuary for anybody who cares to come over. Imagine that.

During the Bush administration, the U.S. supported Haiti's military dictators, the regime that overthrew popular president, Jean-Bertrand Aristide. Rather than live under this oppressive government, many Haitians braved the 600-mile sea journey, often in rickety boats, in order to find a better life in America. Those who made it were immediately turned back.

The Bush administration said the Haitians were economic rather than political refugees, and thus could not be granted asylum. Yet this decision is one that must be made through the asylum hearing process, an opportunity similar to the right to a fair trial. Unfortunately, the majority of Haitians never got a hearing.

While campaigning for president, Bill Clinton said, "This policy must change." Then, after being elected, Clinton changed his mind and dashed the hopes of the Haitians with his decision to continue the last administration's policy. But President Clinton is wrong.

The United States may not be unequivocally obligated to accept offer everyone a space within its borders, but it is obligated to give everyone a chance, and this means asylum hearings for the Haitians.

ED SKOOG

So long, it's been good to know you

Liberal — gone.

El Dorado — gone.

Scott City, Garden City, Dodge City, Ark City, Kansas City — all, all gone.

Parsons stays, as do Cottonwood Falls, Lillis, Nicodemus and Pen Dennis.

Cloud County is gone. Farewell Concordia, Rice, Hollis, Ames, Glasco and saintly Saint Joseph. Farewell.

Keep Climax. Keep Speed. Keep Glade.

Assume I'm 3,000 feet tall. When I walk, townships crumble, rivers reroute.

No doubt I'd go to Liberal first. Kismet would be the only town in all of Seward County. As it should be.

Knee-jerk selfish reflex would wipe out the first tier of towns:

Pittsburg, Independence, Coffeyville.

Garnett, Leavenworth, Atchison.

Sublette would be granted the Order of the Boot. As would Grantville.

From my height, peering down through cloud wisps, past V-shaped flocks of geese, some counties would look so thoroughly disgusting that I'd frenzy, dance a jig, jog a trail of destruction through each acre:

Johnson County would, of course, be flat.

Also:

Sedgwick, Wyandotte, Saline, Butler and Jackson Counties would lie prostrate before my nefarious feet.

Shawnee, my home county — not a trace left.

Even giants have hearts.

Jetmore would remain. Zook and Zurich, too.

My heart would go out to the downtrodden Antelope, and all cities called Elk: Elkhart, Elk Falls, Elk City.

Towns of secrets and unmentioned danger: Covert. Angola. Silence. Protection. Benedict. Reserve.

Ransom. Shallow Water.

Horace Greeley of the New York Tribune was a mildly important person. There are two cities and a county named for him. Horace, Kansas, is in Greeley County. Horace's nearest neighbor is Tribune.

It's all flattened on account of repetition.

If there's one thing I can't abide, 3,000 feet tall, it's needless repetition.

So, gone are all cities with names of other counties.

Ex: Lyons is not in Lyons County. Kiowa is in Barber County, not Kiowa County.

I'd award one-to-one correspondences. Labette County houses Labette, so I remove nothing from it, not even Montana or Chetopa.

Gove's location in Gove County is fortuitous. In reward, I'd stomp everything between Quinter and Campus, leaving only the city of Gove in Gove. Merry Christmas.

Three thousand-foot tall college seniors are notorious for their caprice.

Filled with whimsy I formulate criteria.

All cities with Wells or Mound in their names are trod upon.

Blue, South and Half Mounds all fall victim to my pedestrian tendencies.

Contradiction in a city's name leads to flatness. Goodland, Goodson, Pretty Prairie and Paradise fade to black.

Telling it like it is doesn't faze me, though. Plainville, Centropolis, Plains and Downs go down.

On second thought, keep Downs. The most depressing name in Kansas ought to be preserved.

Other criteria: Names of kids you would have knocked down on the playground (Wilbur, Mildred, Skiddy).

Names of failed presidents (Harding, Coolidge, Bush City, Clinton).

I'd let Caldwell stay because the fiddler for the Flying Burrito Brothers grew up there.

Alta Vista would become the new seat of government.

Any argument? Assume you're 3,000 feet tall. Where would you go first?

Write: Reconstructing Kansas, c/o Richard Andrade, Kansas State Collegian, Kedzie Hall 116, Manhattan (keep or step on?), Kan., 66506.

What would you do with WaKeeney? With Basehor? Bushong? Your hometown?

The harsh sting of the shiny coin

JOHN HAWKS

I didn't watch last week's game against KU, and I'm tired of hearing about it. I've never been a very big fan of the Cats. I don't go to any games, and I don't particularly take notice of whether they win or lose. In fact, for me, men's basketball may as well not exist.

No, I don't need counseling. I still feel like a whole person. In fact, if I cared very much about sports, I'd probably have gone to school somewhere else. (As if coming here with a name like J. Hawks weren't just so much masochism.)

So I wasn't paying much attention when we played KU last week.

I do, however, read the paper. It seems an awful lot of people care about our fans' behavior at that game. They've written in with their handy rules about how to be a "good" fan, so that we'll know in the future how not to "humiliate" ourselves on national television.

Well, I say that a "good" fan should help his team in any way he or she can. I mean, if you think you can't help your team, what's the use in even going to the game? If you're a loyal fan, those players are out there fighting their guts out for you. And you have to support them in that fight.

I mean, after all, people become fans of athletic teams so that they can feel as if they were part of something important. Real fans march on to victory with their team, basking in their glory or suffering in their defeat.

Those penny-tossing fans weren't hoodlums bent on mindless anarchy. They were good fans feeling real pain that they couldn't do anything more to help their team. They wanted so badly to run out on the floor, but they couldn't. They were forced by the "rules" to sit in the stands, tortured by the defeat of their team.

I know that most of the other fans looked aghast on the action of these noble few. They, too, have been brainwashed by the dictators of the game, those who, in the name of fairness, allow them to sit and writhe in agony with the fall of their heroes.

I saw, as you saw, the words of the dictators after the game. The actions of the few, they said, "humiliated" you all. In place of help, they imposed new "rules" designed to disempower even further the "good" fans, subjecting them to new guilt for their innocent enthusiasm.

The dictators of the game, the sports elite, try to artificially separate the fans from the action. The sports elite tells you that the court is another world where heroes can be made. With their rules, they try to dictate to you their values under the the seemingly innocuous name, "sportsmanship."

Don't let them control you. The sports elite is controlled by the "highly ranked" teams like KU. Despite what they say, you can be a part of the game. Don't listen to their talk of "sportsmanship." Heroes aren't made under their rules, but under yours.

Instead, support your team in the best way you can, with all your body and soul. You can be the seeds of a basketball revolution. Where today the few enlightened fans are forced to secretively toss coins on the floor to show their support, tomorrow throngs of supporters will rush out onto the floor, secure in the pressure of their peers, to beat the evil opponents to a bloody pulp.

The ESPN reporters saw the beginnings of this revolution and helped to spread the word to the rest of the country. Rex Walters and the rest of the Hawks want to continue to suppress you. Resist them!

A specter is haunting Kansas — the specter of the Jayhawks! We must continue to coin them beyond recognition! Or, better yet, you can support your team by coining the officials. We can begin to resist them now, and tomorrow will be a better day for our team.

At least, until the next away game.

Bourgeois Brad should hit the road

Editor,

In regard to Brad Seabourn's column in the Jan. 21 Collegian — Brad, if America is so horrible, and the Arab world is so wonderful, why don't you go live there? Maybe my redneck love-it-or-leave-it attitude seems simplistic to you, but I think I have a valid question. You are obviously miserable here, under the tyranny of oppressive Western civilization. Or are you?

I suspect you like the high living standard you enjoy as a citizen of "The Great Satan." I am sure you are also aware that, in the Arab world, your penchant for tweaking authoritarian noses would soon get your head separated from your neck.

In Greek drama, the "hypocrite" insulted members of the audience, with his identity safely hidden behind a mask. Brad Seabourn wears the mask of a radical and gleefully hurls insults at all of us white, middle-class Christians, which he asserts are a blight on the face of the earth. But beneath the facade, I believe Seabourn is as bourgeois as they come.

Abortion pill not the easy answer it seems

Editor,

I agree with one of the Collegian Editorial Board's positions on abortion. I agree that when a woman is pondering abortion it is "imperative she be able to make an informed decision." To that end I submit the following regarding RU-486:

The president of Roussel (the French drug company that developed RU-486) has stated, "As abortion procedures go RU-486 is not at all easy to use ... and requires much more time (than a surgical abortion) because the woman has to live with her abortion at least a week with this technique."

He also states, "It is an appalling psychological ordeal."

It should be noted, too, that with this procedure there is a possibility that the woman will see the fetus she aborts.

Swell game lost in furor over behavior

Editor,

After Monday night's game, K-State received national recognition. On one hand, our basketball players were being highly complimented by the broadcasters for the incredible improvements they are making.

On the other hand, K-State's fans were being characterized as uncivilized, rude and lacking sportsmanship. And this isn't the first time our fans have brought us negative press. What about the Iowa State football game when the ISU cheerleaders were quoted as saying that K-State's fans were the rudest they had ever encountered?

As an alumna, it's really embarrassing to hear such a negative report about the conduct of our fans.

I am making a plea not only to these individuals to act more responsibly, but also to the administration of K-State. President Wefald, you've done wonderful things for K-State. We're gaining national recognition for our academic success and improvement in athletics. Please help us preserve the positive reputation we are building on. Crack down on these individuals who have no idea what the definition of sportsmanship is.

Citizen's arrest an answer to rude actions

Editor,

Living in Kansas City, K-State alumni are typically surrounded by KU graduates and fans. After Monday night's strong performance by the Cats against the No. 1-ranked Jayhawks, one would expect to get a little respect around the office Tuesday morning, maybe hear a few words of praise for our basketball team. What do we hear about instead? The damn penny.

And the worst part is, they're right.

I've been to many a basketball game with purple hair, face and other body parts, and I've vocally questioned the parentage of officials and pointed out the appearance flaws of opposing players.

But there is a line between enthusiastic and stupid. I'm not talking to the few individuals who are doing the throwing; I don't envision them as having any sort of higher reasoning ability. I'm appealing to the ones sitting next to them. Just grab a security guard and get these people out of Bramlage Coliseum.

K-State has always had the best crowds in the Big Eight. And this year's basketball team has the heart of a winner. Let's contribute to that, not detract from it.

a schoolteacher.

"My father," he once recalled, "never told me to become a lawyer. But he turned me into one by teaching me to argue, to prove every statement I made and by challenging my logic at every point."

A penchant for playful misbehavior in grade school was responsible for introducing the young Marshall to the Constitution. He was forced to memorize a portion of the document each time he was disciplined.

"Before I left that school, I knew the whole thing by heart," Marshall once said.

He graduated from Lincoln University in Lincoln, Pa., where he originally intended to study dentistry. After he switched to law, his mother sold her engagement ring to help him through Howard University Law School in Washington. He graduated at the top of his class in 1933.

Serving well after the liberal domination of the court had ended, Marshall's was often a voice of frustration.

In a 5-4 decision in 1972 that struck down capital punishment laws then on the books, Marshall was one of two justices who went all the way and declared that the death penalty was unconstitutional under any circumstances.

The court reinstated capital punishment in 1976, and Marshall often spoke in opposition. In a 1984 speech at the New York University law school, he said the death penalty was being imposed with "startling unfairness."

"The most glaring of the inequities in the administration of the death penalty concerns the race of victims and defendants," he said. "A Negro who kills a white man runs a far greater risk of being executed than a white man who kills a Negro."

He was again in the minority in 1986 when the court voted 6-3 to permit Norfolk, Va., to end the crosstown busing of elementary school students to achieve racial segregation.

buildings, salary rates for staff and a balance required to be kept in the bank.

"We look to break even," Burgess said. "We don't set up a profit margin. We simply hope our predicted estimates will balance and maintain the reserves. Anything left over goes to facility enhancement.

"Many times, parents don't understand why they have to pay so much when they're also paying taxes," he said. "The fact is, we receive no money besides that from students."

Burgess said steps are being taken to listen to the students who live in residence halls. He said this is an attempt to retain current residents and recruit more students.

"We are really trying to find out what the students want," he said. "On the side, we are planning an in-service with the Consumer Relations Board so our staff can help students decide whether or not residence halls are for them.

"If a student wants to move off campus, we want them to make an informed decision," Burgess said. "They have to realize that cost alone shouldn't be a factor, because prices are quite similar. We are very realistic in what advantages our system has to offer students and know we can provide convenience with such things as parking, proximity to campus and meals," Burgess said.

K-State upsets Huskers in Lincoln

Wildcats bend, don't break

STEVEN ROCK
Collegian

LINCOLN, Neb. — The Wildcats posted their second Big Eight road victory of the season Saturday night with a 66-64 victory over the Nebraska Cornhuskers.

That's twice the number of conference wins away from the friendly confines of Bramlage Coliseum than K-State could muster all of last year.

"It feels great," said Cat guard Vincent Jackson, who led all scorers with 17 points.

"It really feels great to win on the road — any game on the road — in the Big Eight."

The win for the Wildcats, their first at the Bob Devaney Sports Center since 1989, snapped Nebraska's 14-game home winning streak and gave the Cats a 3-1 conference record, 11-3 overall.

And it silenced the 14,481 fans in attendance — Nebraska's largest crowd of the season.

But the win didn't come easily.

The Wildcats strolled into the locker room at halftime with a comfortable 7-point lead. But, like the loss to Kansas less than a week earlier, the Cats let that lead slip away.

The Huskers stormed back — after trailing by 13 points with just nine minutes to play — to pull within a point with just more than a minute to play.

But the Cats made five of six free throws in the last 71 seconds to keep the game out of reach. The Huskers were never able to reach K-State, and after the 17:19 mark of the first half — when Nebraska led 3-2 — the Wildcats never trailed.

What was different between this game and the KU game that enabled K-State to hold on for the victory?

"We talked about it in the locker room," center Deryl Cunningham said. "And we said, 'This can't be like the Kansas game.'

"We punched Kansas in the first half, they punched us in the second half, and we didn't punch back.

"When Nebraska came at us hard, we tried to punch back. I'm not saying we gave a solid punch, but we gave an effort to punch back. It might have saved us the victory."

Cunningham finished the game with 10 points, 6 of which came from the charity stripe. He missed just two of his free throws and helped the Cats to a 16 for 22 performance from the line — a 72.2 percentage and the second-best outing for K-State from the free-throw line.

Junior guard Anthony Beane, who finished with 16 points, made three of four free throws in the final 1:11 minutes to help secure the win.

On the flipside, the Huskers made just eight of their 19 free throws.

"That's not going to get it done," Husker coach Danny Nee said.

And it didn't.

Beane, who rested for just 17 seconds at the close of the first half and never saw the bench again, dished out five assists and made a pair of steals. He turned the ball over just three times, despite facing a full-court press much of the evening.

In his last three games, Beane is averaging 15 points and six assists per outing.

"Anthony Beane is a tough young man," Wildcat coach Dana Altman said. "He fights and, very honestly, he's the difference in our program from last year to this year.

"I wish I could take some of the credit, but none of it's mine. I'm not doing anything different, it's Anthony Beane."

The Cats take a break from Big Eight play to take on a pair of non-conference opponents in Bramlage Coliseum. K-State plays Central Connecticut State Tuesday night and Temple Saturday afternoon.

"It really feels great to win on the road — any game on the road — in the Big Eight."

Demon defense shuts down Nebraska in 66-64 victory

STEVEN ROCK
Collegian

LINCOLN, Neb. — Call it premonition.

Following K-State's 84-72 preseason win over the Cuban National Team on Nov. 23, the coach of the Cubans, Miguel Calderon, had words of praise for the Wildcat defense.

Calderon said, in broken English, that K-State's defense was the toughest he had ever seen and could be one of the nation's best.

Hardly words to live by from a coach whose team had just been saddled with its seventh loss in as many games of its U.S. tour, but he may have been on to something.

K-State's demon defense held Nebraska to 64 points Saturday night, 20 points below their average. And the Huskers shot just 36.3 percent from the field, their worst output since 1986.

"You have to give K-State a lot of credit," Nebraska coach Danny Nee said. "You have to give them credit for a quality defense. We played the best we could under the circumstances.

"K-State beat Nebraska fair and square. They just played better."

Nee isn't alone in his thinking. He joined the ranks of fellow Big Eight coaches Roy Williams of Kansas, Eddie Sutton of Oklahoma State and Joe Harrington of Colorado to praise the Cat defense.

The Husker win was just the latest for K-State sparked by the D.

"We got the lead with our defense," said center Deryl Cunningham, whose seven boards were second on the team.

"Whatever else goes on, we have to believe in our defense. That's what's carrying us."

And that defense has carried the Cats through what continues to be a struggling offense.

"We're not really worried about the offense," guard Askia Jones said. "That will come. We just have to keep the defense going for 40 minutes a game."

The Huskers became the seventh Wildcat opponent to shoot less than 50 percent. The Wildcats are holding the opposition to an average of 43-percent shooting from the floor.

K-State is forcing 19 turnovers per game, and the Cats have forced 20 or more turnovers six times.

But the Wildcats, who were outrebounded Saturday for only the second time this season, gave up some key offensive boards to the Huskers, a defensive lapse that has Coach Dana Altman worried.

Nebraska pulled six offensive rebounds in the last three minutes, when K-State could have put the game away. That directly led to seven Husker points.

"That got us in trouble," Altman said. "That's what their comeback was based on — offensive rebounds and second shots."

For the game, Nebraska recorded 23 offensive rebounds. That, coupled with their poor shooting percentage, led to 71 field-goal attempts for Nebraska. K-State took only 47 shots.

But the Cornhuskers made just 26 of those shots — primarily, Nee said, because of a furious defense.

"They handled every bit of the game."

SHANE KEYSER/Collegian

Ron Lucas, Wildcat forward, ties up the Huskers' Bruce Chubick in the second half of Saturday's win. K-State's defense held Nebraska to a season-low 36.6 field-goal percentage.

Wildcat harriers off to a flying start

Records fall as 2 high jumpers qualify for NCAA

BRIAN ANDERSON
Collegian

The Wildcat track team started the new season with a bang.

K-State captured eight events, four each for the men's and women's teams this weekend during the Wildcat Invitational at Ahearn Field House.

Coach Cliff Rovelto said he was pleased with the team's effort.

"There were a lot of good performances," Rovelto said of the squad's first meet. "We're looking at their performance as something to build on. Some events had good competition. We're happy with those that finished one or two."

One of the events that K-State dominated was the men's high jump.

Percel Gaskins and Itai Margalit qualified for the NCAA indoors as they jumped 7 feet, 2 1/4 inches. Gaskins, who set a meet record, beat Margalit because he had fewer misses than Margalit.

"It's great to jump this early in the season," Rovelto said. "Itai had more time to prepare because Percel played football. But Percel is a quick learner. It's phenomenal what he did.

"Just as impressive was Ed Broxterman," he said.

Broxterman, who competed in his first indoor meet as a freshman, cleared 7-1/4 to take third place.

"He responded well for his first meet," Rovelto said. "For a freshman to jump that well is excellent."

Dante McGrew set a meet record in the triple jump as he leaped 50-11 1/2.

Rovelto said that had McGrew not fouled on a different jump, he would have cleared 52 feet.

Chris Pryor sprinted to a first-place finish in the 400 meters at 49.85 seconds, while Randy Helling and Francis O' Neill went one and two in the 800 meters with times of 1:52.95 and 1:53.28, respectively.

Jason Meredith came in second place in the pentathlon, finishing behind former K-Stater Steve Fritz. Meredith collected 3,668 points, 442 points behind Fritz's 4,110 points, which is the Ahearn record.

Gwen Wentland highlighted the women's team as she set an Ahearn record in the pentathlon with 3,392 points and an invitational record in the high jump with 6-1/2.

"That's a hell of a score," Rovelto said. "She had personal records in the hurdles, the shot put, the high jump and a huge personal record in the long jump."

But Wentland said she's not done yet.

"I say I'm really pleased with my effort, but I got a long way to go to win the Big Eight indoors," she said. "I can't stop here and be pleased. If I stay healthy and injury-free, I'll be all right."

The women distance runners took two of the three distance races. Irma Bentacourt captured the 800 meters in 2:14.9, two seconds ahead of teammate Paulette Staats. Jennifer Hillier came across the finish line in five minutes to take first place in the mile.

Rahma Mateen won the long jump at 19-6 3/4, a foot better than the second-place finish, and took third place in the high jump at 5-4 1/2.

The women won their 1600-meter relay at 3:52.07, while the men came in second place at 3:21.17, only .21 seconds behind Southwest Missouri State.

▶NO. 6 DUKE FALLS

TALLAHASSEE, Fla. (AP) — Reserve Byron Wells hit a 3-pointer with 3.6 seconds left in overtime Sunday, giving Florida State an 89-88 upset victory over No. 6 Duke.

The Blue Devils (13-3, 3-3 Atlantic Coast Conference) have already lost more games than they did all last season, when they went 34-2 and won their second straight national championship.

Florida State (13-5, 5-1) has won five straight ACC games since point guard Charlie Ward returned to the starting lineup after quarterbacking the Seminoles' football team.

▶TIGERS DROP OSU

COLUMBIA, Mo. (AP) — Missouri's Chris Heller outplayed Oklahoma State's Bryant Reeves, the Big Eight's leading scorer, in helping the Tigers beat the Cowboys 79-63 Sunday afternoon.

Heller recorded 15 points and a career-high 16 rebounds. Reeves, who weighs 70 pounds more, scored 17 points, three below his average, and had just eight rebounds.

The win was Missouri's 16th straight at home over Oklahoma State.

Lady Cats fall to 0-6 in conference

COLLEGIAN STAFF

And the Lady Cats' woes continue.

K-State lost a pair of weekend games, falling 72-54 to the 22nd-ranked Oklahoma State Cowgirls on Friday, and 68-60 Sunday to Oklahoma.

Oklahoma State, which improved to 16-2 overall and 4-0 in the Big Eight, was led by the duo of Lisa McGill and Stacy Coffey. McGill led the scoring effort with 22 points, while grabbing five boards. Coffey recorded 18 points, six rebounds and eight steals.

Three Lady Cats scored in double figures, Kelly Moylan leading the way with 15 points. Leah Honeycutt added 12, and Gretchen Bertrand chipped in 10.

The Oklahoma inside game proved to be too strong for K-State in the second half of the Oklahoma road swing. Backed by center Angi Guffy's 12 second-half points, the Sooners built upon a 26-22 halftime lead. Oklahoma came out with a 9-0 run in the early minutes of the second half to move up 35-22.

The Lady Cats battled back to pull within eight (49-41) on a Kelly Moylan 3-pointer, with 10:14 to play in the contest. Later, an Andrea O'Neal trey play cut the Sooner lead to seven (53-46) with 6:21 remaining.

The Lady Cats couldn't make up the difference.

"I see some things that occured in the game that hurt us," Coach Susan Yow said. "First of all, we lacked a tremendous amount of intensity throughout the whole game.

"The loss on the defense was the factor that probably broke our back," she said. "They were able to hit too many two- or three- footers in the paint."

K-State had two players in double figures. Senior Leah Honeycutt paced the team with 19 points, and Shanele Stires added 16. Guffy led the Sooners with 18 points.

The Lady Cat record has fallen to 7-8, with a dismal 0-6 mark in the Big Eight. After starting the season with five wins over non-conference opponents, the Lady Cats have struggled with more competitive teams. Home losses to both Minnesota and Illinois-Chicago sparked concerns for K-State.

A tournament championship in the first-ever University of North Carolina/ Wilmington tourney alleviated fears.

But conference play started on Friday, Jan. 8. Six games and three weeks later, the Lady Cats are still looking for their first conference win.

The Sooners move to 8-7, 2-3 in the Big Eight.

Programming change aiming to increase diversity at DB92

Although interest for bluegrass has been around for a long time, none of the music has ever been featured on the air at DB92.

Chapman said the show will also spotlight local folk artists, and sponsor local events.

"It will bring more new music to the area," he said.

Talk radio enters DB92 programming Monday nights, when Student Senate will conduct a talk show from 7 to 7:30 p.m.

"A Purple Affair" will feature campus events, guests, and interviews of student body presidential candidates during election time, Chapman said.

The show will be limited to issues concerning student government, Montgomery said.

"Student government is responsible for a lot of our funding. We feel obligated to give them some time," he said.

"We have an obligation to serve the community by discussing more issues."

People should tune in to "A Purple Affair" to hear the voices of the campus, Melin said.

"I hope people listen to it rather than turn it off because it is talk radio," he said.

Another specialty program that DB92 will feature is a Techno show.

The show will feature dance-oriented music, airing Thursdays from 10 p.m. to 1 a.m.

"The Techno show is something we've been lacking. We have an audience for it," Chapman said.

The station and its various shows will also sponsor bands regularly, Melin said.

"We're going to bring a lot of real good, live music to the area," he said. "We're letting everybody know about the station this semester."

"Roseanne" won for best comedy or musical series, and co-stars Roseanne Arnold and John Goodman took best actress and actor. "Stalin" brought the mini-series or TV movie actor award to Robert Duvall and support acting awards to Maximilian Schell and Joan Plowright.

Standing in for Roseanne Arnold was her husband, Tom, who said she was home sick.

"Most of all, she'd like to thank her fans — and it's about time," he said. Roseanne Arnold has been nominated for an Emmy just once despite the popularity of her show.

Thompson was rewarded for her role as the independent wife in "Howards End," a movie about class consciousness in Edwardian England.

"If I have a wish left in the world it's for the creation of more great female roles," she said.

"The Player," a satiric view of Hollywood, triumphed in the best musical or comedy film category. Tim Robbins, who played an unscrupulous film producer, was hailed as best actor in a musical or comedy.

Miranda Richardson, the carefree vacationer in Italy in "Enchanted April," won best musical or comedy film actress. Plowright, the feisty widow in the film, won best motion picture supporting actress.

Gene Hackman's role in "Unforgiven" earned the motion picture supporting actor award.

"Aladdin" won trophies for Alan Menken for original motion picture score and for Menken and Tim Rice for the original song "A Whole New World."

"Indochine," a French production tracing the beginnings of revolt against the French colonial regime in Vietnam, was named best foreign language film.

In the television categories, "Northern Exposure" captured the drama series Golden Globe and Regina Taylor and Sam Waterston were TV's best dramatic actress and actor for "I'll Fly Away."

"Sinatra," the saga of the singer's life produced by his daughter Tina, was named best mini-series or movie made for television.

Laura Dern's role in "Afterburn" brought her a Globe for best actress in a mini-series or TV movie.

Special awards were presented to Robin Williams for his voicing of the genie in "Aladdin" and to Lauren Bacall for lifetime achievement.

Iraq denies trying to test new administration

In an interview with CNN, Hummadi said the recent U.S. attacks were "minor ones, and we are committed to the cease-fire." But if attacks continue, the two sides could be in for a difficult time, he said.

In other developments:

■ U.N. experts resumed destruction of mustard and nerve gas at the Muthanna complex north of Baghdad, said the team's leader, Paul Brough, an American. The team, which had been kept out of Iraq for several weeks, is acting under a Gulf War cease-fire provision requiring Iraq to dismantle weapons of mass destruction.

■ Iraqi officials claimed a U.S. cruise missile that struck outside the Al-Rashid Hotel on Jan. 17, killing two people, was a deliberate attack. Pentagon officials say the missile was one of 45 aimed at a suburban factory involved in nuclear weapons work and was knocked off course by anti-aircraft fire.

■ Hundreds of Jordanians, including politicians, union leaders and human rights activists, marched through the streets of Amman cheering Saddam and chanting anti-American slogans. Many Arabs are criticizing the West for being harsher on Iraqis than others who ignore U.N. resolutions, such as Israelis and Serbs fighting the Muslim-led government of Bosnia-Herzegovina.

The northern no-fly zone, north of the 36th parallel, was imposed by the U.S.-led allies in April 1991 to protect Kurdish rebels from Iraqi attacks. The southern zone, south of the 32nd parallel, was declared last August to protect rebellious Shiite Muslims.

Iraq rejects the zones as an infringement on its sovereignty and says they are an effort by the West to partition Iraq.

Clinton has pledged to continue the policy begun by President Bush to respond strongly to Iraqi threats to allied planes in the air exclusion zones.

Pentagon officials said the latest incident occurred Saturday night.

YOU'RE ASKING ME?

Reader offers comments on relationships, commitment

DEAR CASSANDRA,

I am a foreign student at K-State, and I have been reading your column since you started. There are certain things I have noticed and thought you may discuss.

First of all, I thank you for writing this column because it provides answers to a lot of questions that people have and don't talk about.

Second, your column became a stereotype later on. It started losing its attraction. So, please make sure that you have something interesting to talk about because there are a lot of readers, and you don't want to disappoint or bore.

During my stay in the United States, I have noticed that people don't have strong relationships. Men complain that women are not committed, and women complain otherwise.

Nobody seems to try to work things out. Nobody is willing to sacrifice. Everybody wants others to change for them, but no one wants to change themselves or their priorities for their loved one.

No wonder relationships are breaking up, exes call each other jerks and bitches, and married men and women fool around with other people and get divorces. Then these people justify themselves by saying they were not happy, and they did the right thing.

I don't have any question. I just want your comments on this.

Sincerely, A Reader

DEAR READER,

I appreciate the comments about the column. I try to cover a variety of subjects, but, as evidenced by your letter, relationships continue to be the most popular topic.

I do share your opinion that many folks don't take their relationships seriously or treat loved ones with the proper amount of respect.

Consideration is certainly the most ignored human quality.

As for infidelity, if people invested as much energy in their relationships as they do cheating they would be much, much happier.

DEAR CASSANDRA,

I am a male, and have been living with two women since the middle of last semester. Until recently, it has been a platonic situation. This semester I have discovered that I am attracted to one of these women. I spoke to her last weekend about my attraction to her. We both had been drinking, and she told me she really enjoyed my company and felt an attraction toward me, but that she was also attracted to women.

She went on to tell me she and our other roommate have been involved in a relationship for more than a year. After she told me this, she basically asked if it would cause a problem in our living arrangements.

I didn't think it would, but late last night they both came into my bedroom and asked if I would sleep with them. At first, I was repulsed by the idea and told them no. But the more I think about it the more attracted I am to both of these women. My feelings fluctuate between repulsion and excitement concerning this. I'm not sure how to handle this. Please help.

Bewildered

DEAR BEWILDERED,

I take it that you are considering entering a sexual relationship with your two roommates. You say you feel both repulsion and excitement thinking about the possibility of a menage a trois (literally, nowhere to put your elbows).

You'd better get your feelings sorted out about all this before you all jump in the sack. Your confusion will likely be magnified afterward if you enter a sexual relationship you are not emotionally prepared for.

If the three of you are agreeable to this arrangement, then power to you. What you do in your bedroom is your own business. But keep in mind that you would be entering a complex romantic relationship and would be dealing with the feelings of three people.

Course teaches teachers about agriculture

"Many talented instructors, including university faculty, researchers, farm producers, commercial owners and operators, as well as education experts, contribute to the course," Tally said.

Teachers learn through hands-on activities how to integrate agriculture into subjects such as math, science, language arts and social studies, Tally said.

To be admitted into the course, teachers must fill out an application and be accepted.

Those who are accepted receive full-tuition scholarships sponsored by agriculture and education organizations and other interested individuals, Tally said.

To receive credit for the course, teachers must create a teaching unit about some facet of agriculture. Tally said she instructs them to create something they will use in their own classroom.

In the past, Tally said, some of the unit topics have ranged from pigs and cattle to tractors and Christmas trees.

She also said the course has been a big hit with teachers who have taken it in the past.

"They find it full of ideas and materials they can take back and use in the classroom," Tally said. "Several teachers have commented that they couldn't wait to get back to school to use what they'd learned."

Labrador's racket is psychology

DARREN WHITLEY/Collegian

Susana Labrador, junior in industrial psychology, came to the United States to play tennis and get a college education, something she couldn't do in her home country of Spain because Spanish universities do not have sports teams. Labrador, who is on the K-State tennis team, is holding a large Piñata.

NICOLLE FOLSOM
Collegian

The first time Susana Labrador, junior in industrial psychology, visited the United States, she assumed she wouldn't be back again.

Labrador, who is also a member of the women's tennis team and originally from Matadpera, Spain, received her first glimpse of the United States when she attended the John Newcombe Tennis Ranch in New Braunfels, Texas, for six months in 1989.

Coaches from several colleges offered Labrador scholarships to begin school in the fall, but she declined.

Labrador just wanted to play tennis.

"I didn't want to worry about studies," she said.

Instead, she continued to travel throughout Europe, competing in team tournaments with the Spanish National Team and on an individual basis.

Part of Labrador's success in the sport can be attributed to her early start in the world of tennis. She began playing at the age of nine.

"At the time, everyone in my family played tennis," she said.

Two years later, she became one of the youngest competitors to enter the Catalam Federation, a regional tennis federation comprised of members from northeast Spain.

Labrador was chosen to join the SNT at age 13 and continued to play with them for seven years.

After returning from the United States in 1989 and touring Europe for several months, Labrador said she decided she wanted to pursue an education as well as the sport she loved.

This was impossible in Spain.

"You cannot play tennis because of the system back home," Labrador said. "Universities don't have sports."

She came to K-State in Fall 1992 after attending two junior colleges in Texas and Brigham Young University in Utah.

She chose K-State for a number of reasons, Labrador said.

"The people are really nice and open."

She said she enjoys Manhattan's small size, and it's low crime rate.

Labrador said she also appreciates the architecture.

"The buildings on campus are beautiful."

She senses distinct differences in family ties between Spain and the United States, she said.

"In Spain there is a lot of unity in your family."

It is more common for mothers to stay home with their families in Spain rather than to hold jobs, she said, which is more prevalent in the United States. Also it is customary in Spain for families to eat together every meal, Labrador said.

Despite the differences, Labrador plans to stay in the United States and play tennis until she finishes her industrial psychology degree.

She said she has always has been interested in psychology, and it will be useful when she returns home.

"When you finish in the United States, you can use your industrial psychology degree in Spain."

Labrador doesn't include professional tennis in her future plans. To get ready for the professional arena, she would have to practice at least eight hours a day.

"I just don't have the time," Labrador said.

She plans to pursue her career and would like to coach if the opportunity arises.

"It's a skill I've been using my whole life," Labrador said. "I love the game, and I love being outside."

Student sues University over sexual violence policy

SHAWN BRUCE
Collegian

A K-State student charged with rape and sodomy in September 1992 is asking that the University's Policy Prohibiting Sexual Violence be found unconstitutional and unenforceable.

Mark Mazour, junior in architectural engineering, alleges in an amended petition for judicial review that his constitutional rights, including the right of due process, were violated. The petition was filed Jan. 15 in Riley County District Court.

The civil action filed by Mazour names the K-State University Office of the President, the office of the Dean of Student Life and the panel acting under the Sexual Violence policy as respondents.

Mazour was arrested September 10, 1992, on charges of rape and sodomy after an incident at the basketball ticket campout.

However, the Riley County Prosecutor's office refused to take the case to trial because of what Riley County Attorney Bill Kennedy called contradictory evidence and the fact that both parties had been drinking.

Kennedy said if additional evidence came forth, the case could be prosecuted under the Kansas Statute of Limitations for up to two years.

After Kennedy declined to prosecute, a four-member University committee convened to decide whether or not Mazour was guilty of violating the University's sexual violence policy.

The panel is the University's response to the July 1992 Higher Education Act passed by Congress, which requires universities to have a policy and procedures in place to address complaints of sexual violence.

Based on evidence heard during those meetings, the committee decided Mazour was guilty of violating University policy and imposed sanctions upon him.

In a letter dated November 30, 1992, Pat Bosco, dean of Student Life, outlined how the committee made its decision and outlined the sanctions that Mazour would have to meet to remain a student at the University.

Those include performing 100 hours of community service during the Spring 1993 semester, making restitution to the alleged victim for any monetary debts incurred in the context of the campout incident, and having no contact with her or her roommate. Mazour was also required to enroll in a women's studies class and to read three books to be named by Bosco about rape or sexual assault, meeting with him 10 times to discuss those books.

Bosco was out of town Monday and could not be reached for comment.

Mazour appealed that decision to University President Jon Wefald. In a letter dated December 11, 1992, Wefald denied the appeal and upheld the committee's sanctions.

Mazour refused comment on the case but claims in his petition that Susan Scott, assistant dean of Student Life and chair of the panel, was

K-State student stabbed to death during weekend

Freshman attacked on highway; suspect arrested for homicide

DEBORAH WHITSON
Collegian

The death of a K-State student has sent a wave of shock through the lives of his friends and family.

Scott O. Sanders, 19, freshman in mechanical engineering, was stabbed to death early Saturday morning on his way back from visiting friends in Emporia.

SCOTT SANDERS

Sanders and two friends were traveling north on Highway 57 out of Council Grove when their car was stopped and an altercation occurred. The other passengers were unavailable for comment.

Roger Rinehart, Junction City, was Sanders' roommate during their first semester at K-State in the fall of 1992.

Rinehart said he was able to get a sketchy account of Saturday morning's events, which are not part of official records of the investigation.

He said Sanders and his companions had stopped at a convenience store in Council Grove when one of the men with Sanders exchanged vocal comments with other customers outside the store. Sanders was said to be defending his friend and trying to stop the exchange.

The clerk was alerted to the exchange, Rinehart said, and threatened to call the authorities. The group broke it up, and Sanders and his friends left the store to continue on their way.

Once on the highway, a car or cars blocked the way of Sanders and his friends. The three left the vehicle, and a fistfight ensued, Rinehart said.

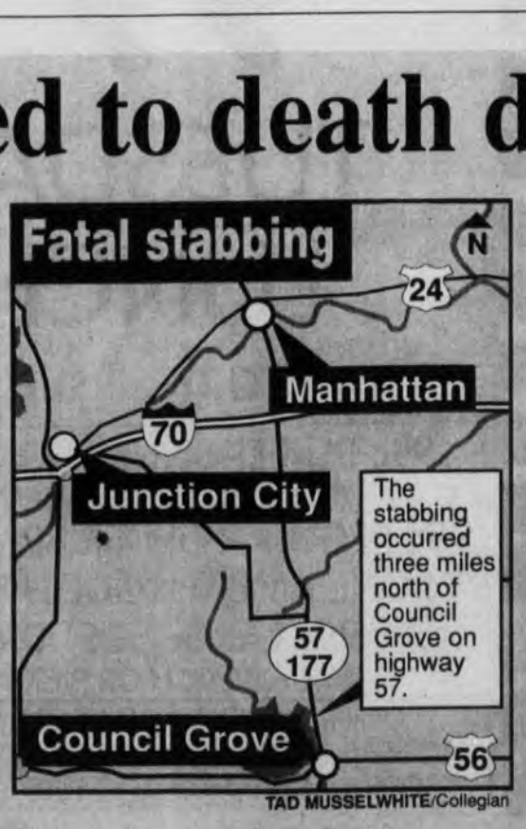
During this fight, Sanders was allegedly stabbed by the suspect, Scotty R. Adam, 18, of Council Grove.

"He died in his best friend's arms," Rinehart said.

"He was a really special guy to everybody," Holly McConkey, freshman in public relations, said. "He was probably the sweetest guy I've ever met in my life."

McConkey said the tragedy has changed the way she and her friends think.

"This could have happened to anybody," she said. "Even in a small town things like this can happen, and it has really scared everybody."



McConkey graduated from Junction City High School with Sanders.

"He had only been here one semester and hadn't made his mark yet," she said. "People need to realize how special he was to everyone who knew him."

This could have been anyone, McConkey repeated.

"Unfortunately, it was him," she said.

McConkey had also heard accounts of the events of Saturday morning.

TAD MUSSELWHITE/Collegian

"I think his friend knew he wasn't going to make it," she said. "He said, 'My friend is dying, give me a Bible.'"

Sanders' father said Scott was especially interested in cars.

"I think that's why he enrolled in mechanical engineering," Ernie Sanders said.

"Cars were his passion. He had hoped to get on with an automotive manufacturer and design a new type of car."

Rinehart said Sanders was popular with his classmates.

"He had lots of friends," he said. "He was always trying to keep us out of trouble.

"Scott was a car nut. He liked to rebuild engines. I think he was planning to get a '57 Chevy and race it in Topeka this summer. That was his dream."

Sanders was a lifetime Junction City resident and graduated from Junction City High School in May 1992. He helped establish the Vocational Industrial Club of America at JCHS and was president of the club his senior year.

Besides his father, Scott is survived by his mother, Louann Sanders, also of the home.

Funeral services will be at 10 a.m. today at St. Xaviers Catholic Church, 218 N. Washington St., Junction City. Memorial funds have been established through the Mass-Hinitt-Alexander Funeral Home, 618 N. Jefferson St., also in Junction City.

Robert Daub, Morris County attorney, was unable to comment on the accounts of the incident, which is still under investigation.

He said the charge had been increased to one count of first degree murder, from second degree murder, after new information was found Monday.

Daub said Adam had been released on $50,000 bond. Adam's first court appearance is set for 10 a.m., Feb. 1., in Morris County District Court.

MUSIC

Guitarist's new album combines variety of styles

Stradlin forms JuJu Hounds, releases mix of rock, blues, reggae, punk

TRICE ALFORD
Collegian

Leaving one of the world's most popular bands and releasing an album with a totally new one is a difficult task. So is trying to combine rock, blues, reggae, country, gospel and punk onto one album. Izzy Stradlin has done both.

The former guitarist for Guns 'N Roses has set out to make his first solo album with his new band the JuJu Hounds, and the result is an experiment of various types of music on this self-titled release.

REVIEW

Tracks like "Somebody knockin'" and "Shuffle it all" are blues-rock combinations which show just one side of Stradlins' interests. These particular songs are two of the best on the album.

Other quality tunes on the release include "Time gone by," which is one of two acoustic songs on the album and "How will it go." The interesting thing about these two songs in particular is the varied assortment of percussion instruments used. This gives the songs a very down home, blue grass sound.

The two most interesting tracks on the release are "Pressure drop" and "Come on now inside." "Pressure drop" is an extreme stretch for Stradlin. He combines a harsh punk guitar sound that later transfers into a reggae beat.

"Come on now inside," a rather slow song, incorporates a choir on backup, which gives a gospel appeal to the track. Even though it is an interesting sound for the JuJu Hounds, the tune is slow and very repetitive.

Another interesting track on the album begins after the last song on side two. It's an instrumental piece which uses only percussion instruments. It begins with a Latin beat, transitions into an African tribal rhythm, then ends with a Native American dance beat. This gives another side to Stradlin's diverse area of musical interest and is a interesting addition to the album.

The area that is most lacking on the album is the normal Guns 'N Roses tune. The rock style tunes on the album, which should be Stradlin's main area of experience, are nowhere to be found.

Efforts on "Cuttin' the rug," "Train tracks," and "Take a look at the guy" are less than expected. These tunes lack a tight sound quality, which you would expect from a professional musician.

Overall, Stradlin's attempts to explore unfamiliar territory are a success. He has developed a quality blues sound, a strong punk sound and incorporated various percussion sounds into the album. Yet, the normal "rock" type of song is where Stradlin is lacking most.

Vets evaluate war, peace

BREN WORKMAN
Collegian

Benjamin Franklin said there never was a good war or a bad peace.

To some Desert Storm veterans, the war in the Persian Gulf was a good deal better than most.

In the midst of renewed Allied bombings of Iraq, K-State Desert Storm veterans who were deployed from Fort Riley are left to re-evaluate the accomplishments of the Gulf War and the need for future military intervention.

"I think we're doing the right thing in bombing Iraq to get them to comply with the United Nation's mandates," Former Infantryman Mike Pearce, freshman in animal science and industry, said.

"We have to ensure the UN inspectors' freedom, as well as the safety of Allied pilots patrolling the no-fly zones."

Pearce said there comes a point when bombing alone doesn't always get the point across. It starts out as a nuisance, and then it is later tolerated.

"If the situation worsens, I think we should reserve the right to petition the UN to ease cease fire restrictions to allow us to finish what we started," Pearce said.

He said he believes the heart of the problem lies within the Iraqi leadership, a belief shared by other K-State Gulf War veterans.

"I fully supported taking Saddam out in the first place," former Infantryman Dan Hellman, sophomore in accounting, said. "We accomplished the mission in the Gulf War that we were sent to do, but it seems that suffering of the Iraqi people continues."

He said if the Allied forces would have tried to overthrow Saddam Hussein, he would have been worried about the Arab response to the Western aggression.

"Western intervention has been a fear of the Arab nations since the times of the crusades," former Fire Support Officer Allen West, graduate student in political science, said.

"We had to stay within the UN guidelines and not use the UN to promote our own self interests."

He said the Gulf War was not necessarily a war from which a harmonious "new world order," or even a peaceful Middle East, automatically sprung.

"We assumed that we would be back in Iraq eventually," West said.

"You always have to keep the diplomatic lines of communications open when dealing with countries like Iraq, but once those lines are shut down, there is no recourse other than the military option."

West said the political objective of the Gulf War was met — Iraqi forces were forced to withdraw from Kuwait. However, the military objective was not achieved.

"From a military standpoint, you have not defeated a force unless there is a change in the command structure," West said.

"The UN is learning a valuable lesson," he said. "You can't always pacify a fanatical leader."

Speak up, Manhattan

WE SUGGEST

The residents of Manhattan should make it a priority to speak and listen at the upcoming 'community listening tours.'

Our nation is based upon certain inalienable principles. The most sacred of these is that government is run by the people, for the people.

This week Manhattan is in the midst of a milestone in the journey to make this idea a simple reality. The realization of this dream came last night as city department managers and local residents met at the Douglass Center Annex for "community listening tour."

The reason for the meeting was simple — open up the lines of communication, let the people speak and let them be informed.

The brainchild of new City Manager Jim Pearson, the meetings are designed to allow Manhattan residents to meet and talk with those employed to serve them. All around the room are the plans for such projects as airport renovation and to citywide compliances to the American Disabilities Act.

"The purpose of the meetings is really to go out into the public, get opinions, let the residents meet the staff from the various departments and ask questions about what concerns them," Ron Fehr, Assistant City Manager, said.

The meetings are set up in an informal fashion and set the tone for a much needed heart-to-heart. All too often, city employees are kept at arms length and are simply names behind the headlines.

Residents' questions will help them learn more about their own neighborhoods, the Municipal Airport, Manhattan Fire Services, parks and recreation and community development.

Last night was not the only chance to become a part of the discussion meetings. The city will also have a meeting Wednesday at the Army Reserve Center, 715 Griffith Drive, and Thursday at the Headquarters Fire Station's Large Assembly Room, Denison Avenue and Claflin Street. Both meetings are scheduled to begin at 7 p.m. and conclude by 8:30 p.m.

These meetings are only as fulfilling as the people who take part. So exercise your right of free government, and let your voice be heard. Go to the meeting near your neighborhood. Let them know you care.

Pro-choice platform built on a shaky foundation

JOHN HART

The legal barriers the pro-life movement will face in the near future will be almost insurmountable. President Clinton's recent lifting of several abortion restrictions is only the first of many legal setbacks the pro-life movement will likely face during the next four years. Also, the passage of a version of the 'The Freedom of Choice Act,' essentially ensuring a woman's right to an abortion, is a very real possibility during Clinton's term.

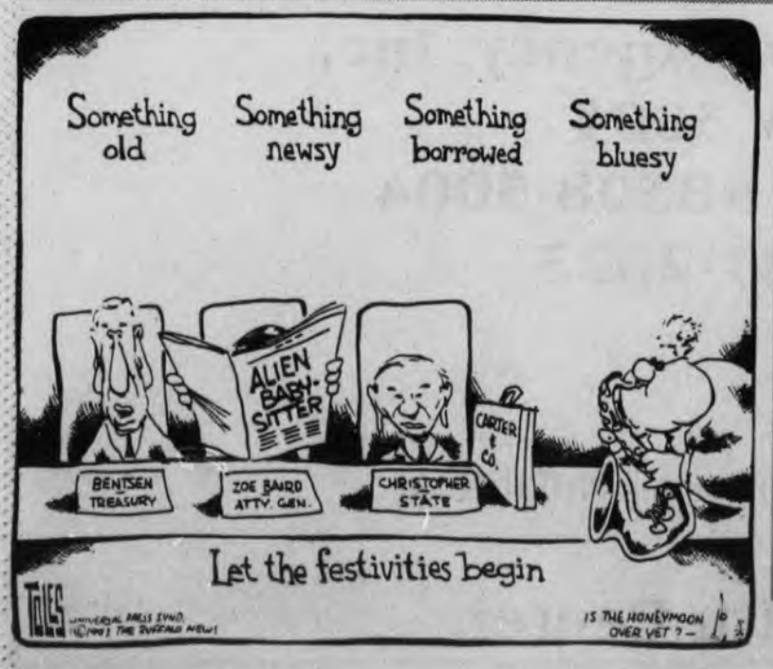
The debate is by no means over, but it's time for a new approach to the issue, including a move away from unsubstantiated slogans to an effort to provide adequate grounds for either belief. The question most worthy of debate is whether or not abortion is murder. The argument is simple. Murder is illegal and if abortion is murder, then abortion should be illegal.

The pro-choice movement bases their argument that abortion is not murder on three premises. First, they claim that life is a process. There is no single "event" when a fetus becomes a person. Instead, a fetus gradually becomes a person. However, this logic is useful for creating an elastic line of personhood vs. nonpersonhood that can be stretched to fit the arbitrary whims of pro-choicers.

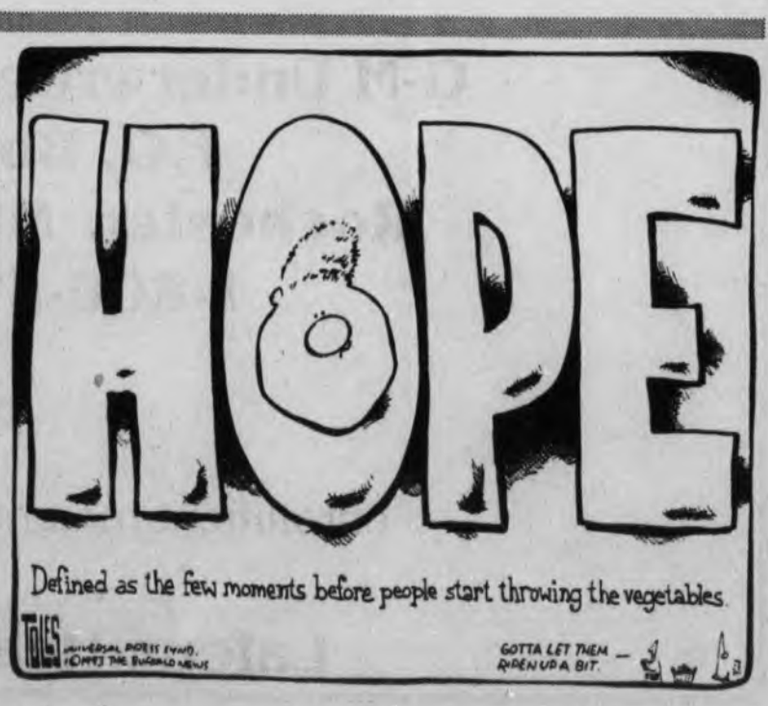
Second, pro-choicers describe the unborn as "potential persons" that must develop certain qualities before they can be called "actual persons." The two baseline qualities of actual persons according to Joseph Fletcher, pro-choice ethicist, include a "minimum level of intelligence" and "individual or separate existence." Fletcher has decided that anyone below an IQ of 20 would not qualify as a person and anyone below an IQ of 40 would be a questionable person. So are people who don't possess a "minimum level of intelligence" due to severe mental retardation, senility or a coma, nonpersons? Also, at what specific point does a fetus attain a "minimum level of intelligence"?

The "individual or separate existence" clause excludes the unborn from personhood because they are not existing separately from their mothers. Babies born two months premature often go on to live healthy lives, but if that same seven-month-old baby were still in the womb it would be classified as a nonperson. It's unreasonable to believe that a fetus magically becomes a person once its umbilical cord is cut. It's like believing an apple on a tree is a nonapple, but once it's picked it suddenly becomes an apple. All living things are actual. The fetus is an actual person with potential.

Finally, pro-choicers claim that although a fetus is alive in biological terms, it's not a person but a "mass of tissue." Yet a wealth of biological and psychological evidence demonstrates that our mental and physical states closely interact and effect one another. You can't describe human life in strictly biological terms. If you had relatives who were mentally-retarded and senile, or who failed to meet the pro-choice criteria for personhood, would you introduce them as your relatives, fellow human beings, or your relatives, "masses of tissue." Also, pro-choicers don't cite a specific time as to when their alleged "mass of tissue" becomes a person.



The pro-choice argument claiming that abortion isn't murder can only be taken as, at best, a vague uncertainty. When deciding whether to take a life or spare a life, uncertainty is unacceptable.



The pro-life movement, on the other hand, offers a clear and consistent argument as to why abortion is murder. "Life has a very, very long history, but each individual has a very neat beginning, the moment of its conception," Jarome Lejeune, professor of fundamental genetics in Paris said. Conception does last several minutes, but at one point what did not exist, now exists. There's no room for guessing, as with the pro-choice position. A human being starts its lifelong process of development at its moment of conception.

The issue isn't that simple, pro-choicers claim. For example, abortion should remain legal because children will be born into poverty and such a condition may drive them to a life of crime. Is poverty worse than death? Unwanted children may be born into abusive environments and become murderers. Yet the same children might overcome adversity and become great leaders who lead innovative community service projects, run for public office and save lives. These children deserve a chance. You can't be certain what children will become. So, why not give them the benefit of the doubt? The abortion issue is not that complex, pro-choice rationalization is complex. Murder is the most important question in the debate and must not be evaded.

But don't we live in a pluralistic society where one group, whether the pro-life movement or conservative Christians, shouldn't be allowed to impose its values on society? We also live in a society where the rights of those without a voice must be protected. This is why I'm pro-choice. I'm for the right of the unborn child to choose to live or die.

▶ RACISM

Columnist tends to oversimplify problem

Editor,

In his recent editorial, "Racism fought on wrong plane," John Hart attempts to do exactly what he purports to be a failure regarding race relations in our culture: oversimplification.

When he dismisses the "Tomahawk issue," Hart strikes at the very problem of diversity, mainly that the dominant white culture has got to get used to not making decisions for other cultural groups in issues that are based outside the white European tradition. There is a reason that there is a greater number of AIDS persons among blacks and Hispanics. You can't ignore the economic and political reasons. To leave it at what Hart calls a "behavioral issue" ignores the fact that behavior can be the result of many factors outside the personal. Once again Hart frames the issue in his own beliefs rather than exploring the complex of reasons that influence an individual and create problems in society.

Hart is right to state that just learning about another culture, or laws against racism, will not change the heart or soul of a person. He is wrong, however, to simplify the problem again by saying "Love one another." There is a reason that people don't love one another, and much of it is based on ignorance of the realities of the other person.

To solve a problem as complex as racism, there is no one shot solution, whether it is legal, political, educational or moral. Only a complex solution will solve a complex problem.

Until we realize that individuals make up every group, we will keep proposing these simple solutions based on false assumptions that all individuals in a large group think alike on all issues and at all times. Perhaps a beginning for Mr. Hart might be to at least include in his research knowledge that morality and love are not concepts on which the Judeo-Christian tradition has a monopoly.

Education and knowledge of diversity cannot assure tolerance, understanding or respect. Without them, however, there is not much chance of changing bigotry and hate. Why don't we start with a reality check?

▶ SCOTT SANDERS

Lack of compassion shown with report

Editor,

I am writing in response to the article printed Jan. 25, about the murder of Scott Sanders.

Scott Sanders was a freshman engineering major at KSU and was a friend to a great deal of students on campus. I am outraged by the lack of compassion shown by the Collegian. I would expect a promising, young KSU student whose life was so tragically taken away would receive more from your paper than a one column AP report. Not having the consideration to mention when his funeral is or who to contact to find out is an awful and atrocious misdeed.

The town of Junction City has been named across the state as being rough and crime-filled, and though there is some truth in this statement, Scott was in no way, shape or form a troublemaker. I have asked myself this question: what if it was a K-State student from Council Grove killed by a Junction City man? Would it get more attention? Probably so. And I know that when people read your report on the incident, they said to themselves, he got what he deserved.

Scott did not deserve this. He was not just another "Junction City man" who was stabbed to death. Scott Sanders was an 18-year-old friend, son and a bright KSU student. His death has left the community of Junction City crushed.

The fact that Scott was murdered cannot be changed, but your small one-column article can be. This letter represents many people who feel the same way as I do. God bless you, Scott.

Aaron Decker
Freshman/English

All must remember slain K-State student

Editor,

I am writing in response to the article that appeared on Jan 25, concerning the death of Scott Sanders.

I was expecting the Collegian to be more compassionate and at least mention that Scott was a student here at K-State. Scott deserves to be recognized as the great person he was and not just a "Junction City man stabbed to death." Scott had many friends here at K-State that cared deeply about him, and we are outraged by his tragic death. He was loved by everyone who knew him.

I believe that the Collegian should be responsible for writing about all students, not just a few. I hope the students here at K-State will soon be told about the great student they lost this weekend due to a senseless, gross murder.

Please help us carry on Scott's spirit by sharing it with the student body and community.

▶ CAMPUS PARKING

Policy ignores Jardine residents

Editor,

The idea of paying for a residential parking permit on campus and not being able to use the stall is outrageous. I am referring to Parking Services and their policy of making Jardine residents pay $50 for a parking permit.

Students who live in residence halls do not have to worry about getting stuck while trying to get in or out of the stall, because Parking Services clears the parking lots. However, if you live in Jardine, Parking Services does not make any attempt to clear the stalls.

Usually I have to park on Denison Avenue, and I am not able to get in or out quickly enough for the flow of traffic, which results in a needless safety hazard. The stalls are not specifically assigned to an apartment. So, if you clear a stall, someone else can take it while you are gone. The University clears the sidewalks leading down to and along the parking stalls, but the snow and ice is moved into the stalls so that residents are unable to pull completely forward in a stall.

Parking Services should not charge Jardine residents $50 for a parking permit if they are not going to clear the stalls. Jardine residents should be assigned their own stall for which they would be responsible for snow removal and only pay $30 for a permit. If Parking Services did not want to take a cut in revenue, they could clear a few stalls so residents could move their vehicles over, and then they could clear a few more.

Where are the Wildcat fans?

BRIAN W. KRATZER/Collegian

Wildcat fans cheer during the first half of the 71-65 loss to Kansas at Bramlage Coliseum. The game drew a season-high crowd of 13,584.

Bramlage Coliseum attracting just 6,732 per game

STEVEN ROCK
Collegian

Bramlage Coliseum is averaging just 6,732 fans for each men's basketball game — a number that's down 1,610 fans from a year ago and the latest in a steady decline of attendance since Bramlage opened for the 1988-89 season.

The obvious question — where are the fans?

"There's some reason they're not coming, but I haven't figured it out," said Angie Johnson, assistant marketing and development director for the athletic department.

Johnson, who coordinates men's basketball season ticket campaigns, said the 2,670 student season tickets sold is up 523 from a year ago.

"We got them to buy the tickets," Johnson said. "Now we need them to come to the games."

According to a poll conducted by the Collegian, bringing the fans into the games is out of the marketing department's hands.

Aside from the personal reasons that keep fans away, the main reason for the poor turnout is K-State's non-conference schedule. With games against the likes of Coppin State, Sam Houston State and Central Connecticut State, many people said it wouldn't be worth the money.

"If we had a better schedule, I'd go watch them play," said Jeremy Lippold, sophomore in electrical engineering. "It's not just that we're winning — I want to see other good teams, too.

"I don't want to go see us blow out Southwest Louisiana State or whoever," he said.

Alan Staatz, senior in electrical engineering, didn't buy season tickets for the first time in four years — also because of the non-conference schedule.

"That was the overriding reason," he said. "It just didn't seem worth it."

Six respondents said they had low expectations for K-State and decided not to buy season tickets.

"I didn't think we were going to be this good," said Devin Hall, sophomore in finance. "Now I wish I would have."

Only one of the 50 people questioned has attended all eight games.

The Big Eight season is sure to bring the number of fans at Bramlage up. But, if the overall average for the season doesn't reach 7,300 fans, the basketball team will not meet expected financial figures, K-State's chief financial officer Jack Key said.

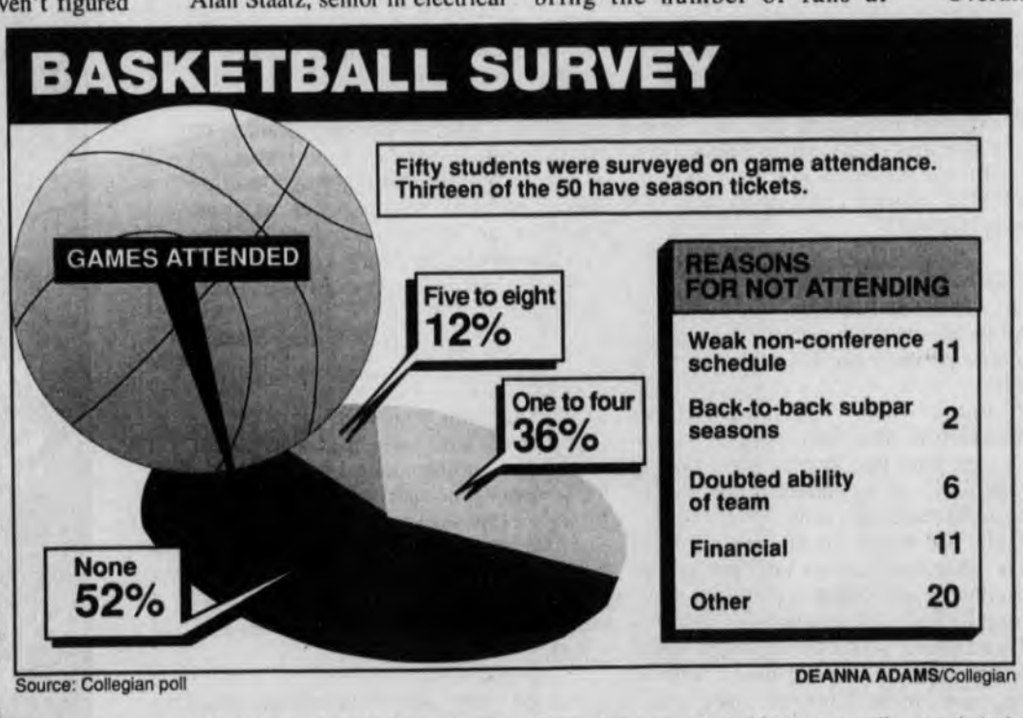
"We would probably have to cut our budgets later on in the year," he said. "And it wouldn't be just the basketball program. There would be cuts across the board."

But Key said he doesn't expect that to be a problem.

"I don't think that's going to happen. In fact, my guess is that we'll be closer to 8,000 than 7,000 when the season's over."

Overall, 6,700 season tickets were sold for the 1992-93 campaign — 32 less than the average.

The decline in attendance, Key said, is not the fault of the students.



"It's really been on the alum side," he said. "The students here have been great.

"But the walk-up attendance is less than what was anticipated."

Attendance at the games affects more than the athletic budget. It affects the players and the game.

"I love the crowd," Wildcat guard Brian Henson said. "That's part of the home-field advantage. If you have 2,000 fans, that's not an advantage."

Reserved tickets for tonight's game will be at a reduced rate of $7 to help lure fans into another non-conference game — the Central Connecticut State Blue Devils.

DEANNA ADAMS/Collegian

K-State takes break from Big 8 schedule

BRIAN ANDERSON
Collegian

They aren't the Blue Devils of Duke University.

They are the Blue Devils of Central Connecticut State, K-State's opponent tonight as they play the first of two non-conference games this week in Bramlage Coliseum.

Even though these games aren't Big Eight contests, the team won't let up on intensity, Coach Dana Altman said.

"Our basketball team recognizes the significance of these two games," he said. "Both are big games. We've got plenty of conference games left."

K-State is in sole possession of third place in the Big Eight after beating Nebraska Saturday, 66-64, to go 3-1 in the conference with 10 games remaining.

Defense has helped the Cats jump out to an 11-3 record. Askia Jones said the defense has improved since the 82-83 loss to Nevada-Reno.

"A month ago, we didn't play defense like we have been," Jones said. "We weren't as consistent with our intensity on defense."

Since that loss, K-State has allowed its opponents nearly 66 points a game to win six of its seven games.

Central Connecticut enters the game having lost seven of its last nine games. Included in those losses are road games to Iowa and LSU.

"They've played some good basketball teams," Altman said. "Coming to K-State won't be that big a deal for them."

The Devils haven't won a contest away from New Britain, Conn., going winless in seven games.

Damian Johnson leads the Devils in scoring at 24.3 points a game after leading last year's squad in points with a 30.5 average. The 6-foot-3-inch guard has been the leading scorer in 13 of the Devils' 16 games and has scored more than 20 points 12 times.

The Blue Devils' top rebounder is Byron Smith, who is averaging six boards a game.

Altman said the non-conference games will, ideally, give more playing time to the reserves.

"I hope we can get some of our young players some min-utes," he said.

The 11-3 rec-ord has sparked thoughts of the NCAA Tournament, but Altman said there is a long way to go.

"We realize those 10 conference games are going to determine whether or not there's an NCAA appearance," he said.

Prime Network missed the Cats

Cat fans who tuned in to Prime Sports Network Saturday, hoping to watch the Wildcats upset Nebraska, saw something quite different — Power Stick Hockey Week.

Prime's hockey show was followed by Denver Nugget basketball.

"Prime Network is happy to bring such a quality product to its national viewing audience," Dan Wilhelm, Prime Network's general manager of program operations, said in a press release of the K-State-Nebraska game.

Unless, of course, that audience is in the Denver Nugget district.

"That's just the way it is," Kevin Eschenfelder, program manager for PSN, said Monday. "I'm sorry."

Eschenfelder said that the game was televised across the country, but was pre-empted in those regions that were in the Nuggets' territory.

"The NBA is going to take precedence," he said. "We'd love to please everybody, but we had no idea that was the same day."

No. 1 Hawks fall at home

ASSOCIATED PRESS

LAWRENCE, Kan. — A Kansas team that for two weeks played basketball as perfectly as it's ever been played turned in such a pitiful 40 minutes Monday night that the coach left the team huddle during a timeout in disgust.

A team leading the nation in shooting at 55 percent, and often shooting in the mid-60s a half at a time, suddenly could not find the net.

Go figure. A Long Beach State team blown out by 34 on Saturday by Virginia Commonwealth could do no wrong Monday, cruising past Kansas 64-49 to end the Jayhawks' 14-game home winning streak.

"They didn't just beat us, they beat us bad," KU guard Rex Walters said. "They accomplished what not too many teams have."

And 49er coach Seth Greenberg knew it.

"Tonight is a magical night," he said, reveling in the victory in historic Allen Fieldhouse, where only three visitors have won in the last 55 games.

Kansas, the fourth No. 1 team to lose this year, came out misfiring and finished the first half by shooting just 37 percent. A scoring drought of six minutes from 7:33 of the first half to 1:15 finished KU.

At one point in the second half, Kansas coach Roy Williams turned a timeout strategy session over to his assistants.

"I went in the huddle and said a couple of things and felt if I continued to talk, I wouldn't say anything constructive," he said.

"I can never remember sitting over there feeling that helpless."

Long Beach State spread its halfcourt offense to frustrate the Jayhawks' pressure defense and didn't lose its poise under Kansas' fullcourt pressure.

"The basketball gods were with us tonight," Greenberg said.

Few teams will lose when they outshoot their opponent 75 percent to 37 percent in the first half. The 49ers made 15 of 20 field goals in the half, compared to Kansas' 10 of 27.

Hollingsworth returns home to face Lady Cats

SCOTT ABEL
Collegian

Even though she plays for Wichita State, Ann Hollingsworth said she still bleeds purple.

"I grew up a Wildcat," Hollingsworth, a Manhattan native, said.

"I still am a Wildcat, except when I'm playing against them."

And that's what Hollingsworth will do tonight as she leads the black-and-gold Shockers against the Lady Cats at 5 p.m. at Bramlage Coliseum.

"She's the key to their team," Wildcat coach Susan Yow said.

"She's shown tremendous leadership qualities, and she gives them an aggressive demeanor on the court."

Hollingsworth

As a sophomore forward, Hollingsworth is leading the Shockers in scoring, rebounding and free-throw attempts this season, even though she is the youngest starter for Wichita State.

"She was a great sign for us," Shocker coach Linda Hargrove said. "She was the Kansas Player of the Year her senior year in high school and has really lived up to that.

"She's a leader and can play inside or outside. Ann is a great individual, in class and as an influence on our team."

Last year Hollingsworth was runner-up to the Missouri Valley conference Freshman of the Year. She comes to K-State this season averaging 12.5 points and six rebounds a game.

"Ann's going to get her points against us," Yow said, "but it's our job to make sure she doesn't have 26 points and 12 rebounds."

Hollingsworth still holds 14 school records at Manhattan High, where she led the Indians to 21-4 records in 1990 and '91.

But during her senior year, Hollingsworth got only one letter of interest from the Wildcats.

"K-State's previous coach (Matilda Mossman) had recruited me," Hollingsworth said. "I had gone to her camps, but the coaching staff switched, and they didn't offer me a scholarship."

Hollingsworth wasn't recruited by the Shockers until she met Coach Hargrove during the 6A state basketball tournament her senior year.

"It was a real late thing," Hollingsworth said. "Linda met me after a game to see what I was like as a person. And then I went down to Wichita a couple weeks later and had a really good time.

RAFFERTY'S WORLD

DAVID-MICHAEL

YOU'RE ASKING ME?

by Cassandra Duveaux

Older woman leaves reader confused following breakup

DEAR CASSANDRA,

Not too long ago, I met a girl that swept me away. I had never gotten along with anyone like I got along with her. She made me feel so happy (and we never even had sex!).

Before her, I'd never stayed with a girl very long — I was afraid of relationships. She made everything easy. I felt comfortable with her. Part of the reason is that she's had more experience with relationships — she was five years older than me.

Everything was going fine, until one day when she just wanted to break up. She said she didn't want to have another relationship yet because she was afraid of getting hurt. She wanted to leave me before I could leave her.

This really took me by surprise, and I'm having a hard time getting over her. I see her every once in a while, and my blood pressure skyrockets. Cassandra, can you tell me if this type of behavior is to be expected from girls that have been hurt by previous relationships? How do I deal with the situation if I encounter it again? How or what can I do to help me get over this girl?

Shaky Foot

DEAR MR. FOOT,

I'm a little confused by your letter — probably because you seem to be a little confused about your feelings for this woman.

It sounds like you realize the relationship is over and want to know how to get over her. It may seem unfair that she broke up so suddenly, but that's water under the bridge now.

If you are really upset and feel like you're obsessing about her, get some counseling — an objective person to talk to might be just what you need.

If you think you can cope on your own, I'd suggest staying busy. Spend some time with friends, take that weekend trip you've talked about, see some movies or catch up on some books you've been meaning to read. Ask someone new out for dinner. It may not seem like it now, but there are plenty of fish in the sea.

DEAR CASSANDRA,

I just have been reading your column a couple of weeks ago. Today I read the letter from "Lonely, the one and only," and I would like to share my feelings with you and the lonely. You are not the only lonely one. We are in the same situation. I am a new foreign student at K-State. I feel very lonely and frightened with people and my academic course. I just arrived here a few weeks ago, and I do not get used to speak, listen, read and write English. It is the biggest problem for me, but I try to study hard.

Moreover, I don't understand your cultures and personalities; you express to be friendly, sincere, but in the real world you don't. You always have a notice of discrimination I think it is only on your board, paper and your policy but never in your mind. You look down, discriminate the foreigner. I met some American students and tried to be friends by smiling and saying "hello," but their responses are silent. I lose my face and afraid to do that anymore. I would like to request all of you to try to understand our "culture shock" problem, and be patient with us. Please do no isolate us, and please love us. "Love makes the world go round."

Thank you for the future love, friendship.

A New K-State Student

DEAR NEW,

I did not edit your touching letter for grammar for a reason. Don't worry, your English is coming along fine, especially for someone who has been in the country for only a few weeks.

I left your letter as written because I think it will help readers understand the many barriers foreign students face — language, culture, making friends and adjusting to a new school.

I hope every American student who reads your letter will take a few minutes to imagine what it would be like to be in your place. I hope the next time they walk across campus they will smile back at you, say hello and be willing to make a new friend.

Sanctions contested in lawsuit biased. The policy against sexual violence states no member will have any knowledge of the case. He alleges that Scott is charged with the duty of counseling and seeing to the needs of the alleged rape victim.

Scott, citing confidentiality, refused comment about the petition.

Mazour also claims he was not fully informed as to the panel's procedure, his rights thereunder, the specific allegations against him or how sanctions were to be determined.

Mazour said that he was denied access to evidence and that neither he nor his attorney were allowed to cross-examine or confront witnesses.

Scott refused direct comment on the case but said the University's policy does not provide for cross examination of witnesses. In response to questions about the legality of not allowing cross examination, Scott said that two lawyers were present when the policy was drafted.

Mazour asks that if the court cannot find the policy unconstitutional and unenforceable and set aside the panels actions, that they modify the panel's actions, including the sanctions imposed.

Greg Kieffer, Mazour's attorney, also refused to comment on the action. He did say in a phone interview that he was tired of seeing and hearing stories in the media.

"Every time a story appears, my client gets harassing letters and phone calls," he said before hanging up.

Mazour is currently enrolled at the University but is not enrolled in the women's studies class as the sanctions required.

Scott said University attorneys Jennifer Kassebaum and Richard Seaton will be handling the case. Kassebaum said the University has no plans to meet Mazour's demands without orders from the court.

"The University utilized its procedures that we have for sexual violence, and we're prepared to stand behind those procedures we have," she said. "We'll leave it to the courts to decide the efficiency of those procedures."

Kassebaum said a judge will look at the record of the panel's actions before making a decision on Mazour's petition. No immediate action is planned, she said.

Buildings receive repairs

Calvin to relocate bathrooms, use attic space; maintenance kept busy

RON LACKEY
Collegian

Walk into any building on campus, and most likely there is some type of repair, maintenance or moving going on.

Anderson Hall is getting new paint and floor coverings on the first and second floors. Two rooms in Lafene Health Center are also being remodeled.

"Both of these projects should be completed by mid-February," Randy Slover, director of facilities, said.

One of the most noticeable projects on campus may be the relocation of bathrooms in Calvin Hall.

"The bathrooms are going to be stacked on top of each other. The plumbing will be re-done and improved," he said.

Future plans for Calvin include an elevator for better disabled access and additional stairways for fire safety.

"Calvin has dead end halls, and the fire marshal doesn't like that too much," Slover said.

Finally, the attic in Calvin will be cleaned out and utilized, he said.

"The business department has been wanting to get in there and use that space for quite a while now," Slover said.

Although construction is loud, there have been no formal complaints filed.

"I haven't received any complaints. Most people here are pleased that a change is coming about," Kay Stewart, assistant dean of business, said.

Projects like this keep the maintenance department busy.

"Our role is three-fold. We do construction, maintenance, and we also are in charge of contracting out certain jobs on campus," Slover said.

Working the jobs around the campus and the students can sometimes be difficult, he said.

"We try to do the noisy, demolition work during the breaks and rebuild during classes. I know it's inconvenient, but it's the only way," he said.

Even though students are in close proximity to the projects, there is usually no danger to students or faculty.

"We take many safety precautions," Slover said. "Our biggest fear is that students get on a site. If they don't stay out then there is a danger."

Hollingsworth leads WSU against Lady Cats

"You can't tell a lot in a one-night bus trip, but the things that were important to me were there, like team cohesiveness and a staff that I liked."

Hollingsworth's low-post play will test the Lady Cat defense in the paint, an area that Yow said suffered a lot of breakdowns in their 68-60 loss Sunday to Oklahoma.

"Statistically, it was the best game we've played in the Big Eight," Yow said. "But we had a situation where we were posting up 5-foot-11 players on 6-foot-2 players and 6-2 players on 6-5 players.

"We're glad to have the opportunity to play a non-conference opponent right now. They're similar in size and record to us, and we appear to be two evenly-matched teams."

In last year's matchup in Wichita, the Shockers beat K-State 70-60, a game in which Hollingsworth had her season highs in points (16) and rebounding (11).

"I was excited to play them last season," Hollingsworth said, "but it'll be more fun to play in Manhattan, where I can do it in front of my friends and family."

Athletes ask for allowance

Students on full athletic scholarships not allowed to work during school year; allowances needed, some say.

MICHELLE HAUPT
Collegian

Allowances for K-State athletes on full scholarship are illegal, yet some athletes say allowances should be given.

Lance Walker, senior in exercise science, is a wide receiver on full scholarship for the football team. He said athletes should definitely receive an allowance beyond what is covered in a scholarship.

"I sat down and figured it up once," Walker said. "If you figure the hours you put in with football-related activities, we don't even make minimum wage.

"For the amount of time spent, the compensation is inadequate, but we are getting an education, so I guess it evens out," Walker said.

Bob Krause, vice president for institutional advancement, said there are no allowances given to an athlete beyond what is covered in the scholarship.

"If so, they are in violation," Krause said.

Full scholarships cover the cost of attendance, which includes room, board, books, tuition, fees and transportation, Krause said.

Athletes on full scholarship are not permitted to work during the school year to help offset costs, Krause said, and it would be difficult for them to find time to do so.

"It's a legitimate concern that we ask a lot of our athletes," Krause said. "A case can be made that it is hard for an athlete to get by."

Stephanie Liester, junior in psychology, is a member of the volleyball team and said an allowance would be very helpful.

"Nobody understands the amount of time it takes to play a sport," Liester said. "An extra allowance would be great, but I'm fortunate for what I get."

For walk-on athletes or those on partial scholarship, working is permitted as long as the money they earn does not exceed the cost of attendance, Krause said.

Tyson Schwieger, sophomore in journalism and mass communications, is a walk-on wide receiver for the football team. He said it is legal for him to work, but he doesn't have the time.

"Technically, you could have a job, but you're so busy," Schwieger said. "Football is basically your job."

Krause said student athletes are allowed to work during the summer, but many still train for their sport, which cuts into the working time.

"At this level, you find athletes that are dedicated, and to be competitive, they train in the summer," Krause said.

K-State volleyball coach Patti Hagemeyer said she understands what the athletes are saying, but financially, she does not know how an allowance system would work.

"If I was a student, I would probably be for it," Hagemeyer said. "But knowing the ramifications, I don't know if it's feasible."

Hagemeyer said she has been involved in college athletics for more than 20 years, and there are many things the school does not cover.

"There are two sides to the situation, and you just can't solve it," Hagemeyer said.

Primary election a result of filings

WADE SISSON
Collegian

Eight candidates are competing for three seats on the Manhattan City Commission.

The terms of Mayor Richard Seidler, Edith Stunkel and Eugene Klingler expire in April. Stunkel and Klingler are seeking re-election, while Seidler decided not to run again.

As of the filing deadline at noon Tuesday, along with Klingler and Stunkel, Bob Rogers, Stanley Crowder, Sydney Carlin, Paul Palenske, Thomas Whalen and Steve Hall had filed as candidates.

Because more than seven people filed, there will be a primary election March 2.

Stunkel's reasons for refiling are simple.

"I feel I can continue to serve the various publics who like my style of being a commissioner and my work on the commission," she said.

Klinger's decision to seek re-election is equally simple.

"I've enjoyed the time I've served on the commission," he said. "I still think I can represent all segments of the community."

Stunkel said she thinks making the commission more open to the public is an important issue.

"I have faced the issue of trying to make the process of commission decision-making more accessible to the people," Stunkel said. "For me, the over-arching issue is how the commission and the city staff can serve its citizens."

That concern is shared by other candidates as well.

"I want the taxpayers to feel that they can come to city hall and ask questions and feel the city government is responsive to their needs," Hall said.

The local economy and tax base is also a major concern of candidates.

Palenske said he thinks Manhattan will experience an unprecedented recession if links among the University, Fort Riley, Unified School District 383 and the city are not nurtured.

Whalen said that while the interrelationship among K-State, Fort Riley and the city is crucial, a stable tax base needs to be built.

"We've always relied on K-State and Fort Riley for our economic backbone, but Fort Riley isn't as stable as it used to be," Whalen said.

Klinger said taxation is a priority for him as well.

Trekkies beam into Wichita

Tabitha Willig, 9, shows her mother, Ladena Willig, and yonger sister, Tamara, 5, her favorite Star Trek character. The three came all the way from Haysville, Kan., for the convention in the Wichita Ramada Inn Saturday and Sunday. A crowd of about 300 people listened to Walter Koenig, better known as Chekhov, when he spoke.

Final frontier lovers space out at convention

MICHAEL LANE

Space. The final frontier in entertainment.

For many science fiction buffs, space fantasy is an imaginary playground. This is what drew hundreds of fans to last weekend's "Star Trek" convention at the Ramada Hotel in downtown Wichita.

To a "Star Trek" fan, known as a "Trekkie", it was the pinnacle of excitement. To an outsider, the event was an alien world.

The convention was sponsored by Creation Entertainment, a Glendale, Ca.-based company founded by two Trekkies who decided to make their hobby their life.

Creation Entertainment puts on several conventions a year, in all 50 states and overseas, as well as producing video promotions for FOX Entertainment's "Star Trek: The Next Generation" and the new series, "Star Trek: Deep Space 9."

Trekkies jockeyed for position around tables featuring "Star Trek" memorabilia and fought the crowds to get their hands on everything from autographed photos to "Mr. Spock" boxer shorts.

They huddled around video screens, watching their favorite characters in action and waiting anxiously to meet Walter Koenig, the notorious "Chekov," in person.

Like members of a therapy group, Trekkies spoke freely of their addiction to the TV series.

"I have every episode on video tape," Chris Sorenson, 18-year-old Wichita resident, said.

Sorenson said he is a die-hard fan, who came equipped with his regulation Starfleet uniform and phaser.

Conversations consisted of favorite "Star Trek" characters, episodes and computer games.

Lt. Commander Sandy Delucia of the Wichita chapter of the "STARFLEET" fan club was on hand with other members of the club for a membership drive.

"We're really normal people once we take off the uniforms," Delucia said.

The fan club, whose members meet monthly to discuss their fetish for the original and the new science fiction programs, is also a service organization. The club sponsors fundraisers for charities like the Special Olympics and the Make A Wish Foundation. They recruited more than 30 new members at the convention.

Koenig was on hand to sign autographs and pose for souvenir photos. He was the veteran navigator of the U.S.S. Enterprise in the original TV program and in six films.

Shockwaves of excitement went through the crowd as Koenig quietly walked among the display tables. Parents hurried to get their children's

NEWS DIGEST

▶BOARD VOTES BOUNDARIES TO REMAIN UNCHANGED

LAWRENCE (AP) — A state advisory board has voted to maintain regional boundaries which determine where juvenile offenders will be housed.

The unanimous vote Monday by the Advisory Committee on Juvenile Offender Programs gives a shot in the arm to the Northeast Kansas Regional Juvenile Detention Center planned for Lawrence.

Two counties, Franklin and Leavenworth, had planned to build their own facilities but now are considering the new fees, Project director Pam Weigand said.

The advisory committee's recommendation now goes to the secretary of the Department of Social and Rehabilitation Services for approval.

▶FAMILY LEAVE, MOTOR VOTER BILLS REBORN

WASHINGTON (AP) — Congressional committees moved swiftly Tuesday on family leave and "motor voter" legislation, two bills Democratic leaders want to get to President Clinton.

The Senate Labor Committee approved the family leave bill. A House Administration elections subcommittee passed the "motor voter" measure by voice vote. Both have Clinton's wholehearted support.

The family leave legislation would require employers of more than 50 people to grant unpaid leave to care for a baby or family illness. The other bill would allow people to register to vote when they apply for a driver's license.

ON THE AGENDA

Program helps college transition for students

LYNN ANDERSON
Collegian

The Upward Bound Program, active at K-State for 22 years, offers direction for improving financially disadvantaged students' academic performance as they make the transition from high school to college.

"Upward Bound is a federally funded mission in which motivation and academic support is offered to students of economically disadvantaged backgrounds and first-generation college students," K-State director Reggie McGowan said.

K-State's program serves Geary, Riley and Pottawatomie counties and is among seven federal programs that make up the Special Programs for Students from Disadvantaged Backgrounds.

"We only offer two of the seven programs at K-State," McGowan said.

K-State offers Upward Bound and the Education Support Service Programs. Upward Bound, the oldest of these programs, was created by Congress in the 1964 Economic Opportunity Act.

The Education Support Services Program provides disadvantaged college students with the opportunity of continued success while pursuing higher education.

In order to better accommodate the students, the program's 17-member staff is comprised of the program coordinators, faculty mentors, high-school liaisons and K-State students of junior and senior status.

"These are students who were formally in the program at the high-school level and have now become full-time college students,"McGowan said. "They serve as mentors for the Upward Bound students, lending a trickling effect throughout the University that enhances the students' academic success."

Ianthalatres Williams, junior in biology, interacts with four Upward Bound students, each for one hour a week.

"I help students with their transition from high school to college life," Williams said.

He said he helps students keep their grades up and shows them places to get help, whether it's academic tutoring or financial needs.

The help is valuable, Williams said, because most of the students are unfamiliar with the college campus.

McGowan said 70 percent of high school Upward Bound students from the tri-county area end up attending K-State. He said he would like to see the program expand.

"I would like to see us expand more at the high-school level. We currently only serve one-tenth of the population of students our program can reach," McGowan said.

"The Talent Search Program reaches the younger students of sixth , seventh and eighth grades and serves as a tremendous feeder for Upward Bound," he said.

TAKING CLASSES AT BOTH K-STATE AND MANHATTAN CHRISTIAN COLLEGE, SCOTT MADDOX IS

Not your typical student

"They are here because they care about the type of people they put out there. It isn't about employment, it's about putting more people out there who care."

SCOTT MADDOX
MCC STUDENT

AMY COX
Collegian

He walks into Espresso Royale looking like he stepped out of a Gap ad. He doesn't look like the "Bible-beating, sandal-wearing freak" label that is sometimes placed on Manhattan Christian College students.

Maybe I'm waving the wrong guy over to my table. My self-description of "short with short hair" had been vague.

The Gap ad sits down, and he is neither a catalog image nor is he armed with a Bible. In fact, he would blend in on any campus.

In my quest to find the "typical" MCC student, I found that Scott Maddox had proven me wrong. There isn't one.

Maddox, junior in Christian education, began 180 degrees from where he has ended up at MCC.

An honors student in junior high, he was thrown out of his honors class and flunked algebra because he surpassed the allowed 10 absences — he racked up 35. A troublemaker.

He was a party drinker who didn't drink alone. But he drank heavily with the social scene in high school. Graduation was soon followed by his enrolling in an alcohol rehabilitation program. An alcoholic.

But those stereotypes were not Scott Maddox. And it wasn't until the Alcoholics Anonymous program that he decided to find out who he really was. He didn't have a startling revelation and "find" God.

His goal, coming out of the program, was to help other teens troubled by drugs and alcohol. He said he warmed up to Christianity slowly and after he had done quite a bit of research and questioning.

He spent last year as a K-State student studying psychology and his summer as a youth intern at Westlink Christian Church in Wichita. It was then that he decided to combine counseling teens and Christianity and came to MCC.

"I just decided it was the best way to use my gifts to my greatest ability."

MCC student is the third stereotype he's faced thus far, and one he is still digesting.

"It's been a shock to my system to be in classes this small," he said. "I'm not used to other people knowing my business, knowing whether or not I make it to my classes."

But one professor to every 13 students isn't all that distinguishes the college.

"I've been to three colleges now. Butler County Community College has the same low ratio, but it's not the same. Most don't give lick one about you. Here, instructors are different.

"They are here because they care about the type of people they put out there. It isn't about employment, it's about putting more people out there who care."

And their numbers are increasing. John Poulson, vice president for admissions and recruitment, said fall 1992 enrollment was the second largest ever. Spring numbers are not in yet, but fall saw 258 students, with 48 getting a dual degree from K-State.

Poulson estimated 50 percent of those attending MCC will get a full-time ministry job.

The other 50 percent is made up of a variety of students. Some are seeking a Christian foundation for a secular occupation. Some just want to take an Old Testament class and fulfill a K-State history credit at the same time, Poulson said.

"People here are totally on fire to make a difference," he said. "Some choose to make a difference as a minister. But you can make a difference as a parent, citizen or in whatever career. Some are still wondering what they're going to do with their life. We try to help them figure it out."

"Figuring it out" is part of the reason all MCC students must take some classes at K-State.

"If you came here and only went here, you could wall yourself in," said Rick Wright, director of student development.

"We try to push people out. You're being pushed out into the rest of the world. Every person is important, and every vocation is important. In saying that, it doesn't detract from the students who come here to devote themselves full time to Christian ministry."

Maddox has been on both sides of the street and said both are important.

"It's valuable to have both perspectives and use them. Especially in my classes like sociology and psychology. It's reality, basically. I can take my Christian perspective to K-State classes.

"Right now, I'm actually more comfortable there (K-State) in those adverse situations because that's what I grew up with. I can relate to people who automatically equate fun with drinking."

He related a high school story of meeting a fellow MCC student for the first time in the back of a police car, cuffed for fighting with a police officer at the drive-in movie. He met him the second time at MCC, studying to be a minister.

Using experiences like that, Maddox said, show that MCC students and K-State students can relate and learn from other, rather than just tolerate each other.

"Not only can I relate to a K-State student, in my younger days, I was probably wilder. I think a lot of good relationships are missed out on because of preconceived ideas," he said.

Maddox no longer has to drink to have fun, and in the process he has found something better.

"I had a lot of fun in those days, but I wasn't a happy person. Being happy is knowing Christ and his unconditional love and forgiveness. Until you have experienced that kind of love, you can't even imagine what it is, but everyone needs it.

"And fun, fun is what you create."

He leaves the coffee shop, stepping into the street. And the MCC student blends in with everyone else.

Marine's death halts progress in Somalia

ASSOCIATED PRESS

MOGADISHU, Somalia — The death of a second Marine underscored on Tuesday how difficult it will be for the United States to pacify Somalia and rapidly withdraw its combat troops from this lawless land.

Lance Cpl. Anthony D. Botello, 21, of Wilberton, Okla., was the third American to die since U.S. forces came ashore Dec. 9.

Botello was shot late Monday by a sniper while on a nighttime foot patrol near a stadium on Mogadishu's northside. Troops fired back and saw a man fall, but his body wasn't recovered.

The stadium houses more than 900 men and women of the Marines' 7th Regimental Combat Team. It is in a perilous area where the Marines frequently come under sniper fire. Pfc. Domingo Arroyo was killed nearby last week.

Washington last week informally asked the U.N. Security Council to consider a new resolution that would transfer the U.S. led military coalition in Somalia to the United Nations.

No action has been taken.

The United States, under former President Bush, obtained a U.N. mandate last November to lead a military coalition to achieve two objectives:

—To secure Somalia's major ports, airports and towns for the safe delivery of food to the starving and other aid from organized looters, free-lance bandits and renegade clan militias.

—To establish a secure environment for a U.N. peacekeeping force that would move on to a second phase of rehabilitation of the shattered nation and restoration of a civilian government.

The first objective has been largely achieved, but the second is a matter of debate. U.N. Secretary-General Boutros Boutros-Ghali has made it known that he does not think Somalia is safe enough for deployment of a peacekeeping force.

The latest Marine casualty came only hours after U.S. army helicopter gunships and Belgian troops blasted with rocket and cannon fire a clan militia column heading for a rival militia's encampment near the southern port of Kismayu.

They killed eight Somalis, Farouk Mawlawi, a U.N. spokesman said.

American officials said seven vehicles and several artillery pieces were destroyed, with no allied casualties reported.

The allies were enforcing a cease-fire in an increasingly unstable area.

Aid agencies have been pulling foreign workers out of Kismayu because of heightened violence, including 10 grenade attacks in the past three days which wounded six Belgian soldiers.

Gen. Mohamed Farrah Aidid, one of Somalia's dominant warlords, claimed the attack on his rival, Gen. Mohamed Said Hirsi, was made at his request, a contention vigorously denied by U.S. special envoy Robert Oakley, the American military and the United Nations.

They all said the coalition military action was taken independently in support of the cease-fire agreement signed by 14 warring Somali factions in Addis Ababa, Ethiopia, on Jan. 15.

Oakley told reporters in Kismayu that Hirsi's forces were violating the pact.

"Therefore, I don't think it's taking sides anymore than we've taken sides elsewhere," Oakley said.

"People have accused us of this from time to time, and they look at the long run, and they see that we're not taking sides."

Gays have place in military

THE ISSUE

Current policy bans any homosexual from being a member of the U.S. armed forces.

WE SUGGEST

President Clinton should follow through on his commitment to allow gays in the military.

It's hard to understand Joint Chief of Staff Chairman Colin Powell's arguments against admitting homosexuals into the American armed forces.

In statements Monday, Powell argued vehemently against a change of the current policy. Homosexuals, he argues, just don't fit into the armed forces in any way, shape or form.

Powell argues that homosexuality, unlike skin color or gender, is a chosen behavior. Simply put, if gays want to be in the army, they can choose not to be gay.

But this viewpoint ignores studies that show a definite correlation between genetic make-up and homosexuality. Although not proven, evidence is beginning to suggest that homosexuals or heterosexuals are born with their sexual orientation already intact.

Powell also argues that gays will flaunt their sexuality and cause discipline problems. But, if and when they do so, procedures are in place to remove those guilty of doing so from service. The proposal to admit gays suggested by President Bill Clinton, makes no special allowances for homosexuals. Gays would be subject to the same code of conduct covering sexual behavior as heterosexuals.

What the proposal does do, is allow gay soldiers to eliminate the lies they have to make in order to serve their country.

Why Colin Powell, a military man through and through, would be opposed to a policy that eliminates hypocrisy and encourages frank openness, borders on the ludicrous.

Fortunately, Powell takes his orders from Clinton. And so far, Clinton has promised to uphold his pledge to break down the barriers the military puts up against homosexuals.

Hopefully, Clinton will continue to do so. And Powell and all others who oppose the policy will have to learn to live with it.

Dan, where art thou?

KELLY KLAWONN

OK, enough is enough. Desk after desk. Row after blessed row. Horizontal. Vertical. Diagonal. Sometimes even in a circular formation.

For nearly four years, the name has haunted me. It invades my life, but yet I am flailing in the anonymity of one Dan Gish.

Who are you? Where are you from? Where have you gone? And why is your name on nearly every damn desk at this school?

I need a face. I need an image. An identity. Habeas Corpus. Why are Latin words in italics? What if my name was Habeas Corpus would that have to be in italics as well? Or what if Dan Gish's name was Latin? Would it be written in italics on all those desks?

I don't mind if someone wants to write on the desks. If you want the truth I even encourage such deviant activity. Stuffy, tenured, eggheads call it childish vandalism. I like to think of it as the umbilical cord for downwardly mobile academics.

When I was a young pimple budding on boildom, I put boogers under my desk top. The boogers would dry up and fall onto the lap of a fellow student, and we would be bonded. Booger bond. I quit doing this when I had a booger land on my lap.

Now I write on and read desks, hoping to fall onto someone's lap. I try and cross my legs, but Dan Gish has fallen on my lap. I think of all the other laps Dan is occupying.

While professors explain dialectic materialism and differential equations, we wander off to the world of Desk Top Lit. And I try and figure out this man they call Dan.

According to the different desks on campus he has a bit of a wild side, and a few less than admiring fans.

In Kedzie 214 it says, "Fuck Dan Gish." On another desk in the same room it says, "Dan Gish likes leather and lace." Scrawled on a desk top in Eisenhower there is the quaint and poetic, "Dan Gish licks gash."

Sounds like a racy guy. My curiosity is definitely piqued.

But desktops alone can't describe one Dan Gish. So I did a little more probing.

"Do you know who Dan Gish is?" I inquired to many a passerby.

As far as the validity of these responses, it is questionable at best. But, in need of information, I continued on my quest.

"Isn't that your roommate?" one retorted in a flurry of confusion.

"I think he is an Acacia," mused one curious-looking fella.

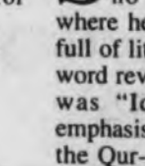
"Sure, he's the president of Kappa Sigma."

Does the Interfraternity Council allow this? He must be a real special guy. Or maybe just a little indecisive.

"Didn't he run for student body president a few years ago?"

"He lives in an attic over on Leavenworth. His apartment has lots of windows."

"I am not positive, but I think he is the guy who sold wieners on campus last year and got thrown in jail for giving a butt-load of people botulism. But I think he is out on parole now."



Whoever this Dan Gish is, he is certainly a busy man.

Not getting anything too convincing, I thought I would pick up the horn and give him a ring. But, lo and behold, he is not in the campus directory.

This man they call Dan Gish is everywhere, but nowhere to be found.

Hey, Dan, game over. Come out, come out, wherever you are.

FROM WITHIN THE KORAN

HISHAM HIDMI
GUEST COLUMNIST

Islam is an Arabic word derived from the Arabic origin "silm" which literally means "peace." The religious meaning of the word Islam is "Peace and free submission to the will of Allah (God)." Practicing Islam is not restricted to performing the daily prayers, fasting the holy month of Ramadhan or performing the pilgrimage to Makkah. Islam is a way of life, and the true Muslim is the one who follows the Qur-an and the teachings (sunnah) of Prophet Muhammad peace be upon him (PBUH) and applies Islam to all aspects of his/her life.

Islam encouraged the human mind to study, think, test and deduce what is needed for everyday life. Not only that, but Islam also challenged man to try to understand himself and the universe he lives in. As a result of this challenge, Muslims were pioneers in many fields of science. The most important fields are the sciences of the holy Qur-an, traditions of the Prophet (PBUH) and Figh (Jurisprudence), among others. Mathematics, optics, chemistry, medicine and sociology are few of the many fields pioneered by Muslim scholars, and the West is still indebted for the early achievements of those Muslim scholars.

I have been reading Brad Seabourn's column for the past two years, and I have always noticed in his writing his hate for religions. It is really unfortunate that in order to become famous, you have to be anti-religion. I do believe that Mr. Seabourn has every right to believe whatever he wants, but I also do believe that, as a columnist, he must not mix the poison with the dessert. In his Jan. 21 column, he uses the dispute between the U.S. and Saddam Hussein to pour his hatred on Islam in specific and on religion in general. His column is full of mistakes and I recommend him to attend the series of lectures given by the Muslim Community Association of Manhattan on the "Basics of Islam" so that he may become a better educated columnist.

Seabourn says "For a Muslim, the only book worth reading is the Koran. There is no other literature." I really wonder where he got this idea. The Islamic library is full of literature on many fields. The very first word revealed to Prophet Muhammad (PBUH) was "Iqra'" which means "read." The emphasis on knowledge is very strong both in the Qur-an and in the sunnah of the Prophet (PBUH) who says that Muslims must have enough qualified scholars in every field of science. The Prophet (PBUH) says "Seek knowledge even if it is in China." This is well reflected since many Muslim students study in the U.S. and other Western countries, and many Muslim scholars work in important areas of technology and science in different U.S. institutions.

Seabourn then says "Early in the history of Islam, Mohammad attempted to win the loyalty of the Jews by emphasizing the similarities between Islam and Judaism." Although it is true that there are some similarities between Islam, Christianity and Judaism, Prophet Muhammad (PBUH) was very careful in keeping the teachings of Islam pure from any other theologies available at that time. The relationship between Prophet Muhammad (PBUH) and the Jews is well documented in the holy Qur-an.

Also Seabourn mixes between religion and nationality when he says: "The Crusades of the twelfth and thirteenth centuries ... did nothing to endear Christians to Arabs." I don't know if he realizes that Arabs are a minority among Muslims. There are more than one billion Muslims in the world, of which only about 20 percent are Arabs.

When Seabourn talks about "fundamentalism," he applies the Western connotation of the word to Islam. Muslims understand fundamentalism as abiding to and closely following the teachings of Islam as understood from the Qur-an and the sunnah of Prophet Muhammad (PBUH). In other words it means being a good and true Muslim. Being "militant," "dangerous" or "deadly" is against the teachings of Islam.

The revival of Islam in the Middle East and in the whole world is not, as Seabourn claims, due to the Arab's defeat in 1967. It is due to the spread of knowledge among the young generation who want to live a true Islamic life. Saddam Hussein, as well as most of political leaders of the Middle East, fear Islam and Muslims because they know that Islam takes the power they illegally took and will put it back where it belongs. In contrast to what Seabourn says, Iraqis, Egyptians, Jordanians, Moroccans, etc. are fed up with the political leaders who deprived them of their rights and have all the intentions to remove them from power.

Clinton opens up question of rights

Editor,

President Clinton has declared open season on children. Many Americans rejoiced at this so-called "protection of their rights." Rights? What rights? There exists in America today a philosophy that places pleasure at any cost and convenience above human life. This is not a new idea. The Bible records such practices and condemns them.

In Isaiah chapter 57, God condemned the wicked acts of the people. They were engaging in sex for its own sake and killing their children; thus allowing them to be pleasure-seekers without the responsibilities of raising children. (It kind of reminds you of America, doesn't it?)

It is apparent God has condemned the killing of children, born or unborn, because God loves children and has a plan for each one if they will turn to God and accept Him. In Jeremiah 1:5, the Lord said to Jeremiah, "Before I formed you in the womb I knew you, before you were born I set you apart; I appointed you as a prophet to the nations."

So God recognizes us and even knows us before we are born. Why then don't we recognize the unborn? Why do we in America continue to kill our unborn children — a truly pagan act? If you are a Christian, you must stand against abortion. This does not mean condemning those who practice it but telling them and praying for them.

The lines have been drawn. Man has rationalized abortion. God condemns it. Whom will you serve, God or man?

Arguments would be wasted on columnist

Editor,

There are several ways I could respond to John Hart's column on abortion. I could argue against him on feminist grounds, questioning the ethics of forcing a woman to carry an unwanted child. I could argue that as long as there is no birth-control method that is 100-percent effective, abortion must remain an option.

I could bring up the standard worst-case scenarios of rape and incest. I could question the morality of bringing an unwanted child into the world. I could refute Hart's explanation of the pro-choice argument.

I know, though, that none of these tactics would change Hart's mind. So instead, I'll simply ask a question: If "life" begins at conception, why don't we figure our ages based on the date of conception, rather than the birth date?

▶ SCHOLARSHIP

Funds needed to continue awards

Editor,

Two years ago, Jan. 31, 1991, our son and brother, Capt. William Grimm, was killed in action during the Persian Gulf War. William's gunship was shot down while on a mission to destroy an Iraqi missile unit that was firing on U.S. Marines during the battle of Khafji. William was a 1986 graduate of K-State and a member of K-State's Air Force ROTC.

Both communities of Manhattan and Junction City have been fantastic in their understanding and support for our family. K-State established two Capt. William Grimm memorial scholarships in 1991 as a remembrance of our son's sacrifice. These two scholarships are for students studying geography and aerospace science (Air Force ROTC).

At this time, both scholarships are in need of assistance. Our family is doing its best with donations, but additional funds will ensure the continuance of this memorial, as well as additional scholarship awards to meet today's increasing education costs.

Donations of any amount are certainly welcome and can be sent directly to KSU Foundation, P.O. Box 1806, Manhattan, Kan. 66502-4925, marked for the William David Grimm Memorial Scholarship. Specify either Geography Q06810 or Aerospace Science Q66858.

Hamlet is popular because it is brilliant

Editor,

I was quite surprised by Richard Andrade's brief article in the Jan. 15 Weekend section of the Collegian, which suggested that we have been glutted by numerous productions of William Shakespeare's "Hamlet."

Andrade warns of the dangers of "Hamlet Fatigue." He proclaims that everyone has had his or her turn playing the role of Hamlet.

I don't think so.

Yes, it's true, all the great English actors of modern times have portrayed Hamlet in the last 20 years or so. Perhaps this is because it is one of the best roles ever written for an actor.

I doubt, however, that few, if any, members of the K-State community had the opportunity to view these exquisite London productions.

Andrade suggests that because of this "Hamlet Fatigue" syndrome, Collegian readers should pass over the upcoming KSU Theatre production of the play and instead rent the video of what he proposes is "the best version of 'Hamlet'," Tom Stoppard's "Rosencrantz & Guildenstern Are Dead." This video focuses on two minor characters in Shakespeare's "Hamlet" and has little to do with the original play. Calling it a "version" of "Hamlet" is a bit overstated.

While the Stoppard film may be interesting to some, it is pretty clear to me that Tom Stoppard is no William Shakespeare.

For shame that anyone would encourage audience members to bypass an opportunity to view a live theatrical presentation of one of the greatest plays ever written by the greatest playwright to ever put pen to paper.

I doubt that Stoppard's play will be in demand 300 years from now, but I can imagine that the Laurence Oliviers and Kenneth Branaghs of year 2293 will be giving life to the Bard's "Prince of Denmark."

Andrade calls it "Hamlet Fatigue." He must have viewed numerous live productions of this great work to have tired of it so, or perhaps his fatigue was prompted by HBO reruns of the abbreviated and commercially sweet Mel Gibson film version of the play.

If so, he may fear that there will be a sequel entitled "Hamlet II." Please rest at ease. I doubt that any living playwright would take the charge to create a sequel, given that Shakespeare's "Hamlet" is considered so brilliant, so grand in the world of dramatic literature.

French culture comes to K-State

UPC Kaleidoscope Films to present award-winning performances in festival

CHRISTINA CARBAJAL
Collegian

K-State will soon get a taste of the French cinema as Union Program Council Kaleidoscope Films presents the 1993 French Film Festival. This free festival begins today and runs through Sunday.

Such award-winning films as "Three Men and A Cradle" and "Cyrano De Bergerac" are among the five selections that promoters are calling the new new wave of French films. These films are well-respected overseas, and promoters said they want Americans to experience these high-quality films.

The three French sponsors are the French Ministry of Culture, French Cultural Services and Unifrance Film International. These sponsors want to give the French cinema more focus in the United States, said Paul Donovan, Union Program Council Kaleidoscope films chairman.

By starting with younger audiences on college campuses, the sponsors said they feel they could build strong interest in French films.

K-State, along with 15 other universities such as Northwestern University, Texas A&M and Columbia University will participate in this film-festival endeavor.

"We're really excited and glad they picked us," Donovan said.

"We are expecting people to come from different universities around here to see the movies."

The films that will be shown were picked because of their popularity and prestigious reputations in France. For example, "Three Men and a Cradle" won the César for best film, which is the French equivalent of the Academy Award. Anne Parillaud also won the César for best actress in "La Femme Nikita."

Gérard Depardieu, whom Americans may remember from the film "Green Card," appears in two of the movies, "Cyrano De Bergerac," and "Too Beautiful for You." Both of these films also received honors, such as Best Foreign Film, the 1990 Cannes Film Festival Best Actor award and a Golden Globe nomination.

The films' awards are not the only reason to watch these movies. The films' diversity may appeal to all audiences. "Too Beautiful For You" and "Three Men and a Cradle" offer comedy, "La Femme Nikita" is dubbed a thriller, and "Cyrano De Bergerac" may satisfy the romantic needs of some viewers.

The sponsors said they hope college students will take advantage of the opportunity to watch these films and that if the project is successful, they may continue the festival in the future.

FRENCH FILMS SHOWING THIS WEEK:

Wednesday/Thursday Forum Hall	'La Femme Nikita' 'Cyrano De Bergerac'
Friday/Saturday/Sunday Little Theatre	'The Little Thief' 'Three Men and a Cradle' 'Too Beautiful For You'

All shows run at 8 p.m. Admission is free.

Wildcats dump Devils, 81-56

Defense ties Bramlage record, gives up 16 points in 1st half

BRIAN ANDERSON
Collegian

The Cat defense strikes again.

K-State limited Central Connecticut State to 16 points in the first half — tying a Bramlage Coliseum low that was set earlier this season — en route to an 81-56 victory over Central Connecticut State Tuesday night at Bramlage Coliseum.

The win improved the Wildcats' overall record to 12-3.

Coach Dana Altman said he was pleased with the first 20 minutes. The Blue Devils shot just 30 percent in the first half.

"I thought our defense was really sharp in the first half," Altman said. "The defense was up on its feet moving well. Our concentration was better."

And Blue Devil coach Mark Adams was impressed with the Cat defense.

"I thought Kansas State did a nice job with their half-court pressure," he said. "It was giving us some problems, and we rushed about every shot in the first half.

"I thought they were as good defensively in a half-court setting as we had seen this season, and we did not make a great adjustment in the first half," he said.

Central Connecticut State, 6-11, outscored K-State 40-37 in the second half by shooting 45 percent from the field.

But the Cats let up in the second half, much like they have many times this season — including the LaSalle game in which LaSalle scored just 16 first-half points.

"The second half was a sloppy half of basketball," Altman said.

The Cats' defense controlled the Blue Devils' leading scorer Damian Johnson to just two points in the decisive first half before he finished with a team-high 20.

"Vince (Jackson) did a good job on him," Altman said. "Other guys did well too, but he got away in the second half."

Jackson did the job offensively as well, leading the team in scoring with 16 points. Three other players scored in double digits, marking the 11th time in 15 games that K-State has had four players in double figures.

One of the players in double digits was Anthony Beane, who finished with 13.

"I think my shot selection is a lot better than earlier in the year," Beane said.

Beane was five for six from the field and connected on all three of his 3-pointers. He has made eight of his last 11.

"Anthony Beane shot the ball

'Lackey's Guide to Hunting Jargon'

RON LACKEY

Hunters have always had their own vocabulary for communication during the pursuit of game. Each sport has its own lingo, and you have to listen carefully to understand the real meaning of what is said.

Hunters are constantly challenged by nature and their surroundings. The odds of a successful hunt are stacked against the hunter. Weather, low game populations, poor equipment, hangovers and just plain bad luck plague every hunter once in a while. Therefore, the hunters have, to their comical credit, cultivated their own outdoor jargon.

If you're heading out on your first trip or just happen to be shooting the breeze with some hunters, you'll need this handy translation guide to help you communicate.

Your duck hunting buddy says, "I'll be there at 5 a.m." Translation: "I'll still be here at the bar at 5 a.m. — maybe we should go tomorrow afternoon."

"The blind is just another 100 yards up." Translation: "I hope I'm not lost."

"I think I have Skoal in my duck call." Translation: "I know I sound terrible."

"Boy, it's nippy." Translation: "It's cold."

"Boy, it's cold." Translation: "Almost Miller time."

"Boy, it's really cold." Translation: "Pick up the decoys — it's Miller time."

"I don't know what would have spooked those ducks." Translation: "Nice pink neon CO-OP hat, you moron."

"I think the cold is making my gun jam. " Translation: "I missed."

Typical response to a member of the opposite sex who asks a hunter if he was cold while duck hunting — "No, my $400 triple-lined neoprene camouflage waders keep me toasty warm." Translation: "I froze my ass off."

"I need to use the bathroom, but I wouldn't want to scare the ducks." Translation: "With these icy fingers, are you kidding?"

"I have a dog." Translation: "I have a dog that might get off my sofa."

"I have a good dog." Translation: "I have a gold medal sprinter that you will see only once, and the next thing you know he'll be in Mitchell county."

"I have a great dog." Translation: "I use a shock collar."

"You go ahead and shoot birds. I'll just block." Translation: "I'll sit in the warm truck, have a cup of java, and get out just in time to shoot my limit."

"Holy ——! I almost stepped on those quail." Translation: "I missed."

"The birds were getting up way ahead of us." Translation: "I missed."

"I knocked him down but couldn't find him. Translation: "I missed."

"I think my dog is on point." Translation: "My dog is chasing field mice again."

"I have permission to hunt this." Translation: "I think the landowner is a little old lady who lives in Salina."

"I'm a safe hunter." Translation: "I've never shot you."

"I love to eat dove." Translation: "My neighbor will eat them."

"You have to know how to cook rabbit." Translation: "My neighbor will eat it."

"I don't know why my dog likes your truck." Translation: "My dog pees everywhere."

"You know, I should really get my dog castrated." Translation: "My dog pees everywhere."

In case you haven't gotten the idea, you might want to ask some golfers. I'm sure they might be able to translate.

Locally, the pheasant, quail and prairie chicken seasons all close Jan. 31.

Spring turkey hunting applications for the unlimited units are now being taken.

The local creeks are starting to thaw. Try using small jigs and spoons on very light line for bass and panfish.

Lady Cats lose 7th in row, fall to 7-9

J. KYLE WYATT/Collegian

Shanele Stires, Lady Cat forward, battles the Shockers' Ann Hollingsworth for a loose ball in K-State's 66-54 loss.

TONYA FOSTER
Collegian

The Lady Cats stretched their losing streak to seven games Tuesday night, losing to Wichita State 66-54.

"Wichita State played hard," K-State coach Susan Yow said. "They wanted it, and they did a nice job."

Manhattan native Ann Hollingsworth tied her career-high with 20 points and led the Shockers in rebounds with 11.

K-State's record fell to 7-9.

Points came slowly for both teams, as K-State and Wichita State failed to score in the first four minutes. Wichita State's Tasha Barnett broke the drought with two free throws at the 16:19 mark.

"I felt we were lethargic in the first five minutes of the first and second halves," Yow said.

The lead changed hands five times in the first half. Wichita State broke ahead to keep the lead until 3:25 remained, when Kelly Moylan made a pair of free throws, and Shanele Stires also connected from the charity stripe. K-State led the Shockers 29-25 at halftime.

The Lady Cats, who shot 36 percent for the game — 24 percent in the second half — gave up 41 points in the final period to the Shockers.

"If you can't hit, you have to play defense and keep them from scoring," Yow said.

In the first half, K-State was 35.7 percent from the field. The Lady Cats made just two of their 11 3-pointers, an 18-percent clip. Wichita State, which took seven fewer shots than the Lady Cats, shot 43 percent from the floor for the game.

The Lady Cats' top two scorers — Leah Honeycutt and Shanele Stires — were a combined seven for 30 for the game. Stires was one for 14.

"We just had a game where two of our key starters couldn't put the ball in the hoop," Yow said. "You're going to have games like that."

"Look at the stats," Moylan said. "You can't win shooting 29 percent."

Yow said the Shockers were more prepared for the game.

" I have to give credit to Wichita State," she said. "They came with a mental state to win.

"They dropped several games on the road, and they could have easily come in here and just folded on our home court, but they hung tough. I give them a lot of credit."

Clinton to remove ban on homosexuals in military

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — The White House asserted the right to revoke the ban on homosexuals in the military without the consent of Congress Tuesday. Some Republican lawmakers explored how to force a vote, but the Senate's top Democrat predicted it will all be worked out.

President Clinton will act swiftly to end the 50-year-old prohibition, spokesman George Stephanopoulos said.

"The president has the power to move forward on ending discrimination against homosexuals in the military," he said.

White House press secretary Dee Dee Myers said Clinton probably would announce his decision on Wednesday. She said, "I don't think it gets any easier" by waiting.

"If we can avoid a legislative battle, that's all to the good," Stephanopoulos said. "But the president remains committed to his policy."

Clinton held his first legislative strategy meeting with congressional leaders — Democrats and Republicans alike — but participants said there was only scant discussion of lifting the military ban on homosexuals.

Senate Majority Leader George Mitchell, D-Maine, said outside the White House that he didn't know how the Senate would vote on the issue if it arose. But he added, "I don't think it's going to come to that. I think it will all be worked out beforehand."

Republicans accused Clinton of ignoring the strong objections of the Joint Chiefs of Staff.

"These experts are saying something simple. If you are looking for a way to destroy the discipline and esprit de corps of a military unit, it is clear — just inject sexual tension into the barracks," said Sen. Dan Coats of Indiana, the GOP point man in the fight with the new administration.

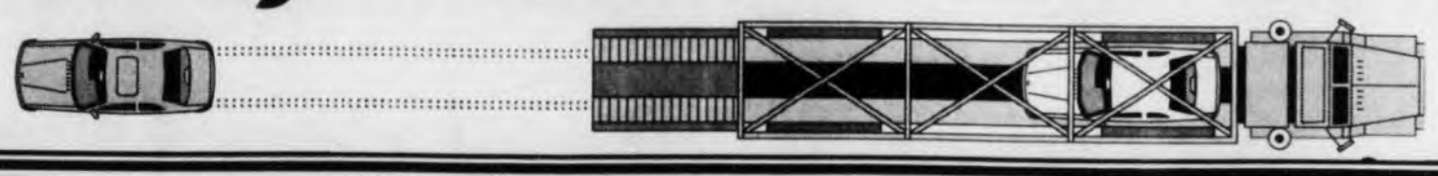
But Republicans were not united in their opposition. Sen. Alfonse D'Amato, whose New York constituency includes a large number of homosexuals, announced on the Senate floor that he supports Clinton's plan.

"No government has the right to discriminate against any of its own people," D'Amato said. "Gays and heterosexuals have served in the military with honor, and they will continue to serve honorably together in the future."

While the White House said Clinton could act on his own, some Republicans discussed ways to force a vote on maintaining the ban.

One strategy called for attaching an amendment to a bill coming before the Senate next week on granting family leave. Another idea was to introduce separate legislation.

"There's a strong feeling we should get to the heart of the issue," Coats said.



Administration officials said Clinton plans to phase in his plan in a two-step process. In the first step, the president would simply direct Defense Secretary Les Aspin to halt the practice of asking the sexual orientation of new recruits and stop proceedings to oust declared homosexuals.

The second phase calls for an executive order formally lifting the ban and addressing the problems raised by the Joint Chiefs and others. The White House envisions issuing the executive order within six months.

Newt Gingrich, R-Ga., a member of the House Republican leadership, urged Clinton to seek a vote in Congress rather than act by some sleight of hand.

"They've got to sit down with the leaders of Congress and do it legislatively rather than just by executive fiat."

YOU'RE ASKING ME?

by Cassandra Duveaux

Meeting that certain guy causes problems for reader

DEAR CASSANDRA,

You will probably never print this because it doesn't seem like a really big problem or anything. I do hope, however, that you can offer me a few suggestions.

There is this guy I really like, well, that I think I like. The reason I say think is that I have never spoken to him before.

Well, I have done something that will probably forever ruin my chance to talk to him because it would be way too embarrassing. I have written him three notes that somewhat told him my feelings, but I didn't sign them. I put XXXOOOXXX on all three of them.

I consider myself a somewhat attractive young girl, and I consider him very attractive. I just wish I could do something about it, ya know? I wish I would have never written those letters now. Maybe I wouldn't be so shy. In fact, I would probably go right up to him because I've asked people and they say he is pretty quiet and keeps to himself.

Do you think the letters were a mistake? What would you do if you were me?

Nobody In Particular

DEAR PARTICULAR,

The young man may be equally confused. He may very well think you are trying to challenge him to a game of tic-tac-toe.

You have several options if you still want to meet him. The following are a few suggestions.

Have one of your best friends ask one of his best friends to ask him if he likes you.

If that is too complicated try this: Have your best friend send him a note that asks him if he likes you. The note should include "yes," "no" and "maybe" boxes for him to check.

Still another option is to have your best friend call him and ask him if he will "go with you." If this seems a little to tame, you could get a bunch of male and female friends together and organize a game of kissing tag, spin the bottle or even, if all are consenting adults, truth or dare.

If none of these methods work, you could simply take a deep breath, walk up to him and say, "Hello, my name is Nobody in Particular. I couldn't help noticing that you have the cutest dimples/smile/firm buns/etc."

Good luck.

DEAR CASSANDRA,

My heart went out to "Lonely, the one and only."

It was like looking in a mirror. Three years ago I was in the same position. A couple of things I did to make friends was pick out one person in each of my classes and made a point of sitting by them each day, especially if I knew they were sitting alone. I made a lot of friends this way. As the saying goes, people like familiarity.

I also made a point of saying "hi" to a few people on the way to classes every day. As statistics go, some did not return my "hi," but most were pleasantly surprised that somebody actually noticed and acknowledged they were there.

And last, I kept in mind that I have never met anyone that thought they already had too many friends and didn't need any more. I now have so many friends that I am amazed I have time to study. But I am always willing to add another friend. So to "Lonely," keep looking for me and remember there are many more like me on this campus.

Everyone's Friend

DEAR FRIEND,

You sound like a very special person. Your advice was much better than mine. I hope "Lonely" and others in the same boat see this letter and find encouragement.

I also hope "Lonely" has the good fortune of having a seat next to you in a class this semester.

really well," Altman said. "He put in a good performance tonight."

Deryl Cunningham added 11 points, and Aaron Collier had 10.

Altman used all 12 of his players, and K-State led by 14 points or more 28 minutes of the game.

"We played a lot of people who have not had time on the floor," Altman said.

One of those players that hadn't been playing much was Brian Gavin.

"It felt great to get more playing time tonight since I don't get much during the Big Eight season," Gavin said, who scored six points and dished out three assists in 16 minutes.

Another big performer off the bench was Kenny McEntyre, who played 12 minutes and scored eight points.

"I hope I get to play more," he said. "I'm gaining confidence with the offense."

The win for K-State guarantees the Wildcats their 49th consecutive home winning season — a Big Eight record.

Star Trek convention brings Trekkies together picture taken with the space legend.

Koenig, who seemed overwhelmed by the attention, smiled faintly and moved his way into the auditorium, where he discussed future projects. In the works are such projects as his new comic book, "Raver," coming out this summer from Malibu Comics. Koenig is also working on a future TV sitcom, "Alien in Wonderland," a parody of the Lewis Caroll classic.

For someone not of the Trekkie persuasion, the enthusiasm was a little puzzling. Other than interstellar combat and hostile alien encounters, where was the Trekkian appeal?

"Star Trek represents a positive message of a hopeful future, where different races come together in peace and don't abandon their own heritage," Koenig said.

Cheating still practiced, class survey says

"We pretty much considered it a given that people cheat once in a while,"

CRYSTAL SAWALICH

CLAY MOORE
Collegian

A recent phone survey conducted by a public relations class found a large percentage of K-State students admit to cheating. If the survey of 150 students is accurate, almost 70 percent of those surveyed cheat.

Nineteen students in a Public Relations Techniques class called and questioned 10 students each. The students were selected at random, and questions ranged from what people's perceptions of cheating were, to whether they had ever cheated or been caught cheating.

Chuck Lubbers, assistant professor of journalism, taught the class that did the survey. The purpose of the exercise was to teach phone-survey techniques to the students in the class, he said.

"The survey we used was actually an improved version of one used at another university," he said. "I thought it went extremely well."

According to the results of the survey, of the 190 students questioned, 128, or 67.4 percent, had cheated. Only three of those who said they had cheated reported being caught.

Statistical breakdowns showed that 73.3 percent of all males responding said they had cheated, while 60.7 percent of all female respondents said the same.

Crystal Sawalich, junior in public relations, participated in the research.

"The class didn't seem that surprised," Sawalich said. "We pretty much considered it a given that people cheat once in awhile."

Sawalich said she was most surprised by the low number of people who get caught, but can understand why they don't.

"I had a class once where the tests were essays," she said. "In one instance the instructor wrote the questions on the board and left the room for about twenty minutes. Everybody basically picked up their books and took advantage of the situation. I was amazed."

Sawalich also said that most of the students surveyed were open about their experiences, since the survey was anonymous.

Lubbers said the survey brought up the question of what actually constitutes cheating.

According to the survey, more than 90 percent surveyed believed that cheating includes looking at someone else's test, using a crib sheet during a test, or having someone else do your homework.

Architecture students study abroad

KRISTEEN YOUNG
Collegian

Thirty-five students in the College of Architecture and Design are studying in Italy this semester.

The program, which sends students to study overseas, is in its third year.

Richard Forsyth, director, professor and dean of architecture, said the program has increased each year in the number of students studying overseas.

Italy isn't the only country students are visiting, but it plays host to the largest number from K-State. Some students will go to Denmark, Japan and Germany.

Fourth-year students in landscape architecture and interior architecture who are interested in the study-abroad program are offered the opportunity to travel.

"It's amazing. Because of the global context these days, everyone seems more interested in studying abroad," Forsyth said.

The students are enrolled at K-State and pay the semester tuition, as well as the cost for the study abroad program. They receive credit for their study, and the number of hours depends on their major.

Forsyth said this semester's expenses in Italy are estimated at $5,520. The program fee includes room and board, tuition and airfare.

In Italy, the program is housed in Santa Chiara Study Center, located in a small hill town called Castiglion Fiorentino, which translates to "castle of Florence." It is about an hour south of Florence and two hours north of Rome, Forsyth said.

"The students are housed with other American students. Some are from Texas A&M and Illinois Institute of Technology," Forsyth said.

In all, 80 students and faculty live there.

They study examples of architecture, Forsyth said. The study gives the students a better perspective of where the architecture come from he said.

"It is critical that they see what they've studied and develop an appreciation for other cultures and geographical regions of the world," Forsyth said.

One student who spent last spring in Italy said he agreed.

"The number of things I learned is endless. I didn't only learn about being a designer, but I learned a lot about myself and about architecture being for people," said Todd Meyer, senior in landscape architecture.

Meyer said the trip changed his opinion on some areas of design and he has brought the new ideas to his studies at K-State.

"People have a preconceived idea that architecture is for the designers," he said.

But I learned that it is done more for people, and that inspired me. I challenged myself as a designer."

Meyer's enthusiasm is what Forsyth said adds to the architecture program at K-State.

"They come back so enthusiastic, and it spreads like fire," Forsyth said.

After the students return from Italy for the fall semester, they are required to share their experiences to classmates through a program. They prepare a slide show of what they saw and did throughout the semester and organize an exhibition of the projects they worked on while overseas.

The students aren't sent to Europe without preparation. Those going to Italy enroll in a one-credit hour class where they learn the basics in the language, customs and history of Italy.

Meyer said he and his classmates were interested in learning about their new homeland for the next six months before arriving.

"No one really did it for credit. It was mostly to prepare us," Meyer said.

Everyone needs a TV and

NINTENDO

LYNN ANDERSON
Collegian

Some K-State students have found an addiction almost as time consuming and expensive as college.

It's Nintendo, a popular video arcade for home TV entertainment.

"Games like the Atari of the past are gone. Nintendo offers a lot better quality," said Mandy Sneed, sales associate for Kay-Bee Toy & Hobby Shop. "Super Nintendo offers better graphics, a sharper image, and is more challenging."

Students have labeled this competitive challenge as Nintendo's biggest salespitch.

"I'm addicted to the competition," Warren Noble, senior in business education, said. "Whether it's playing quarters in a bar, one-on-one, or video games, I just like to compete."

Jennifer Miller, sophomore in social work, said she plays Nintendo about an hour a day.

"You always want to do better," Miller said. "Like Super Mario 3 — you can't stop until you get just one more world."

Motivation for play comes with the expense of the unit and the appropriately challenging video games. For some, this can mean paying the Kay-Bee Toy and Software Etc. quoted prices of $89.99 for a regular Nintendo or $149.99 for Super Nintendo. One must include the average rate of $40 to $60 for individual game cartridges as well.

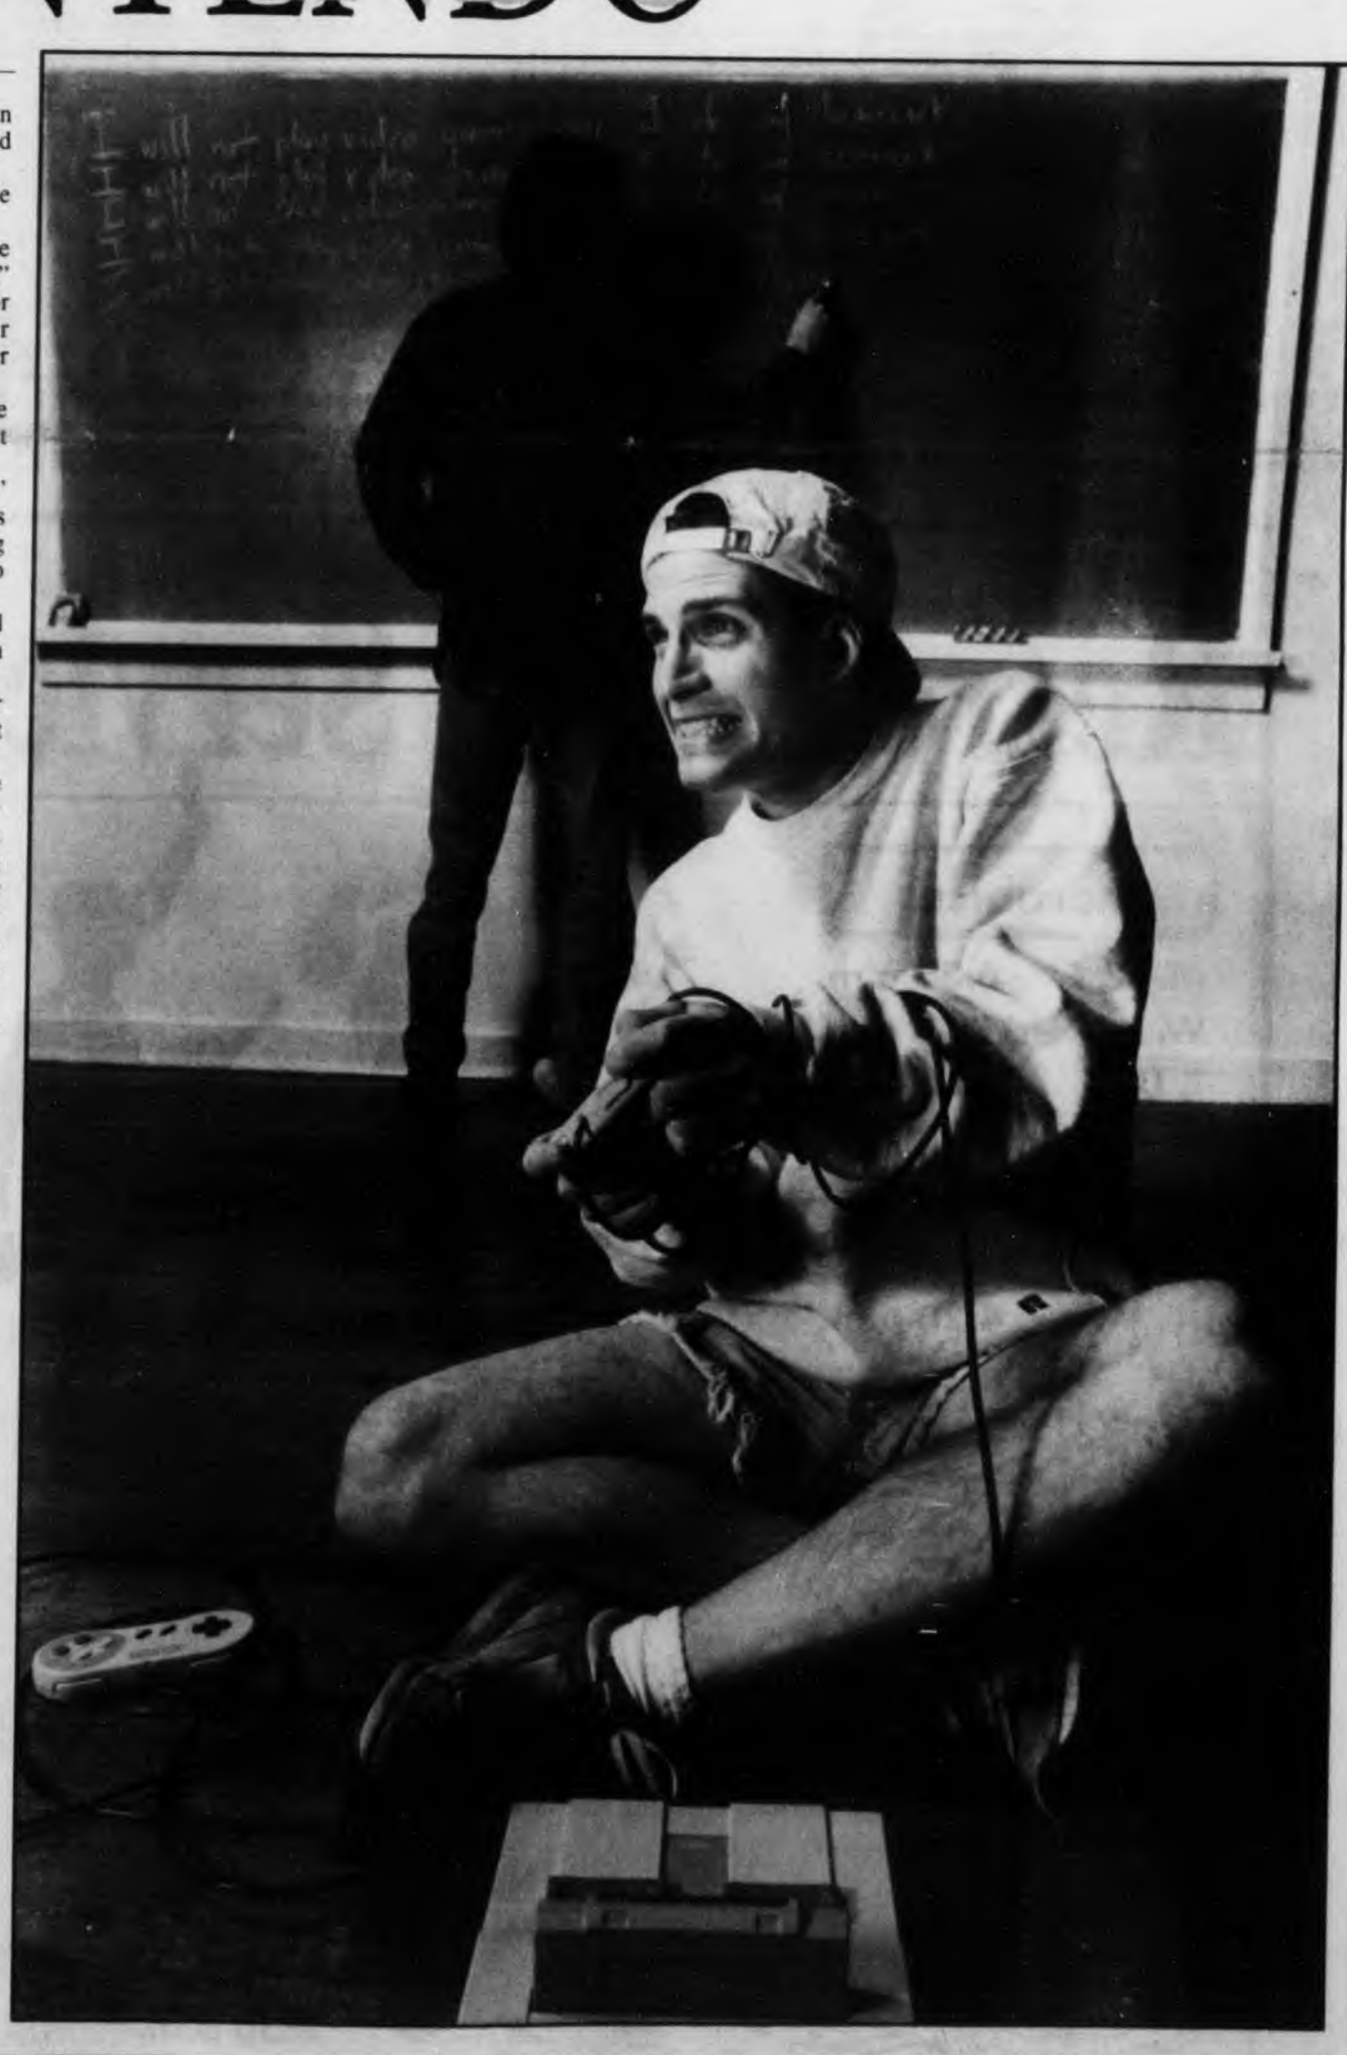
"I've probably had between 15 to 16 games at one time," Noble said.

"It's an expensive habit," Miller said.

Once the Nintendo investment is made, however, students make use of it.

"You get to the point where you seem like you're playing all the time," said Noble, who admits to playing three hours a day. "It's then that I think I can make better use of my time, and I sometimes make my brother hide it from me so I don't play it."

Tisha Peugh, freshmen in pre-physical therapy, opts for renting Nintendo from various video stores.



"If I had it during the weekdays, I'd play it instead of going to class," Peugh said. "I know because during Christmas I played it a minimum of three hours a day."

Brandon Mayberry, sophomore in physical education, said the game can become very time consuming.

"It's easy to play instead of doing things," he said.

Software Etc. manager Tom Mahoney said: "It's something easily accomplished, and you can get better and better if you follow rules and patterns, which isn't true with life.

"Life isn't as easy as Nintendo."

Bosnian leaders appeal to Clinton to supply arms

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — Leaders of Bosnia's embattled government appealed to the Clinton administration on Wednesday to provide arms to its beleaguered, mostly Muslim army.

While no decision was taken immediately, U.S. officials said a partial lifting of the embargo the United Nations imposed on the warring factions remained a priority objective.

Others are getting food to homeless and besieged civilians in Bosnia-Herzegovina, putting pressure on Serbs who are accused of conducting an "ethnic cleansing" campaign and getting prisoners released from detention camps, said the officials, who spoke on condition o anonymity.

According to one U.S. intelligenc estimate, up to 70,000 prisoners are hel

ON THE AGENDA

Students to compete in theater competition

KATHY WASKO
Collegian

Two K-State students made it to the final round in the national Irene Ryan theatre competition in Minneapolis during the week of Jan. 16-21.

Maria Santucci, senior in theater, and Valerie Marsh, graduate student in speech, were the two K-Staters who travelled to the competition.

Santucci advanced to the final 16 performers at the John F. Kennedy Center in Washington, D.C., in April.

The Irene Ryan competition is for young actors from all over the United States to compete with other performers in their region.

Eight regions of the United States compete against each other.

There were 200 performers who began the competition. The performers go through a series of contests until they are narrowed down to 16 people.

The 16 will then compete against each other in Washington, D.C.

Santucci won a $750 scholarship in the competition, and she will be competing at the Kennedy Center for the Performing Arts.

"I might use the money for graduate school or for going overseas," she said. "I've been thinking for several years of taking a summer course in London. The money will certainly help."

The competition was named after the founder — the woman who played Granny on "The Beverly Hillbillies."

Certain shows at K-State are set in advance by the theater department as American College Theater Festival nominations.

"Someone from the outside came in and saw the production of "Our Country's Good" that I was in and then nominated me to go to the competition," Marsh said.

Santucci and Marsh competed against each other in the final round in Minneapolis.

There were five different shows that were up for a nomination. One person from each show was chosen by an adjudicator. A person was also picked by the theater department from each show.

"We performed a duet and a monologue. It's important to contrast the two and to show your versatility," Marsh said.

Scott McLean, senior in theater and journalism and mass communications, will travel with Santucci to Washington, D.C., to perform a duet with her.

"She will perform her monologue, and we will perform a scene from a one-act called 'The Author's Voice,'" he said.

After Santucci received her nomination to perform in the national competition, she chose McLean to be her duet partner.

Rumors circulate about stabbing

Council Grove principal tells teachers to keep discussion out of classroom

TAD MUSSELWHITE
Collegian

In the aftermath of a fatal stabbing north of Council Grove, the community appears to be conducting business as usual.

Many versions of the Friday stabbing of K-State freshman Scott Sanders can be heard from people in Council Grove, but the authorities are keeping information under wraps.

The case is being handled by the Morris county attorney, the Council Grove Police Department, the Morris County Sheriff's Department and the Kansas Bureau of Investigation.

Scotty R. Adam, an 18-year-old senior from Council Grove High School, has been arrested and charged with first-degree murder.

Dennis Delay, the high school's principal, said the school's main objective is to maintain normal school conduct.

"This incident should be kept outside of the school and will be handled in the courts," Delay said.

He said he called a staff meeting early Monday morning and told his faculty not to discuss the incident inside the classrooms to avoid participation in the rumor mill.

Delay said he has been busy with school activities since the incident and does not have any new information about the stabbing.

Delay conducted a locker search Friday, involving two freshmen who were reported to be carrying guns. Some speculated the search was related to the stabbing, but Delay denied any correlation.

"The search took place Friday, before the stabbing ever occurred," he said. "It was not related to the incident in any way."

The locker search and findings are being handled by the school, he said.

An employee of the Council Grove Stop and Shop, where the incident allegedly started, said he has heard several stories told about how the stabbing happened.

Charlene McRae, Council Grove's mayor, said she had nothing to add about the incident, except to say she was "really concerned about what happened."

McRae said she has not heard any of the rumors or stories about how the killing happened.

"People talk amongst themselves, but no one has really discussed it too much with me."

Both Delay and McRae said the incident was a real shock to them and to the town.

"This incident should be kept outside the school and will be handled in the courts."

French peacekeepers become trapped in Croat-Serb combat zone near Zadar

ASSOCIATED PRESS

ZADAR, Croatia — Twenty French peacekeepers were trapped in a combat zone today amid Croat-Serb fighting in Croatia.

On another front in the bloody Balkans, heavy fighting erupted in Sarajevo, the Bosnian capital.

There was no sign of a letup in the heavy fighting in Croatia, where Croats refused to comply with a U.N. order to give up their new territorial gains. President Franjo Tudjman refused to order a pullback unless Serb militias in the region are disarmed.

The bloodshed jeopardizes the peacekeeping plan for Croatia negotiated by U.N. envoy Cyrus Vance in late 1991. The renewed fighting also threatens peace talks between Serbs, Croats and Muslims in neighboring Bosnia.

Until the Croats launched their offensive along the Adriatic coast last Friday, Croatia had been relatively calm for a year. About 10,000 people died there in the 1991 civil war.

The Croatian forces are seeking to regain some of the one-third of Croatian territory lost to the Serb forces.

Croatian forces so far have taken control of the key Maslenica road bridge — the main link between Croatia's heartland and the Dalmatian coast — and the Zemunik military airstrip, both near the Adriatic port of Zadar. Serbs destroyed the Maslenica bridge in the 1991 war.

Just two days after two French peacekeepers were killed and three others wounded, the French Defense Ministry announced today that about 20 of its peacekeepers were trapped in a combat zone inland from the port of Zadar.

Three unarmed French U.N. helicopters came under fire Monday night off the Croatian coast while on a mission to rescue wounded French peacekeepers, said Shannon Boyd, spokesperson for the peacekeepers in Zagreb. None of the helicopters was hit, and no one was injured.

The incidents underline the vulnerability of the 14,000 U.N. peacekeepers deployed in Serb-held areas of Croatia.

France is sending the carrier Clemenceau and naval task force to the Adriatic Sea Thursday to protect its peacekeepers. The British aircraft carrier Ark Royal also has entered the Adriatic on a mission to support its troops in the U.N. force in Bosnia, officials said today.

The U.N. Security Council condemned the Croatian offensive on Monday and threatened sanctions. It also demanded that Croatian Serbs return heavy weapons seized from U.N. warehouses in Croatia over the weekend.

The commander of the U.N. peacekeeping forces in all of former Yugoslavia, Gen. Satish Nambiar, traveled today to Knin, a center of minority Serbs in Croatia. U.N. spokesman Sergio Appolonio said Nambiar was to meet with the regional U.N. commander to look into the evacuation of the French soldiers and discuss the peacekeepers' dangerous position.

In Bosnia, meanwhile, artillery and mortars bombarded Sarajevo, and heavy fighting was reported around the airport as the U.N. High Commissioner for Refugees, Sadako Ogata, arrived. Shelling echoed near the presidency building downtown.

There was no immediate word on casualties.

Ogata was to meet with Bosnian President Alija Izetbegovic and Gen. Phillipe Morillon, the commander of U.N. peacekeepers in Bosnia.

Croatian television reported late Tuesday that Morillon's car was hit by a bullet near the town of Busovaca, 30 miles northwest of Sarajevo.

He was en route back to the capital from talks in Gornji Vakuf in central Bosnia on a cease-fire there between Muslims and Croats, erstwhile allies.

Croatian radio quoted Dario Kordic, an official of the self-proclaimed Croat republic in Bosnia, as saying 35 Croats were killed and dozens wounded in a Muslim attack around Busovaca.

French need help in Bosnia

THE ISSUE

The French government has taken the initiative in helping end the war in Bosnia-Herzegovina.

WE SUGGEST

The United States should assist the French diplomatic and military effort.

The French government recently announced plans to send a naval task force into the Adriatic Sea to possibly enforce the U.N. declared "no-fly zone" over Bosnia-Herzegovina.

The French are responding to an artillery attack on a U.N. control post that killed two French peacekeepers and wounded three others. That brings the number of U.N. peacekeepers killed in Bosnia-Herzegovina to 26.

The French are sending eight ships for support of their ground troops. One aircraft carrier, two supply ships, a transport ship and four specialized frigates could be in the Adriatic by the weekend.

This latest military decision to uphold U.N. sanctions is a welcome change because, for once, the United States didn't have to initiate the military support and manpower.

It is inarguable that there are existing and growing problems in the former Yugoslav republic. The number of broken cease-fire agreements, gruesome tales of rape and large prison camps are just a part of the bigger, uglier picture. The television news broadcast daily meetings in Geneva of Bosnian and U.N. representatives. Nothing substantial has come of these meetings.

The United States has been the forerunner of U.N. policy enforcers. In Somalia and Iraq, the United States has not only been the military support but has been the largest contributor.

The United States has played the part of global watchdog in the past. Right or wrong, the United States intercedes when it sees fit. Now, something is needed in Bosnia-Herzegovina.

The United States has always asked for international support of its endeavors. The United States now should offer its help to France.

The main assistance should be in the diplomatic arena. At this point, negotiations have not produced any successful agreements. More countries need to help the U.N.'s side of the talks in trying to resolve the problems between the factions. The United States should be at the head the line.

America could also consider sending planes to assist the French in the patrolling of the "no-fly zone," which has not yet been enforced. Serbian helicopters make several runs a day through the zone, uncontested.

President Clinton did run on an America-first platform. The United States should be the main concern of the new administration, but foreign affairs cannot be forgotten. The United States has certain responsibilities in aiding other countries in the enforcing of international laws.

OTHER VIEWPOINTS

Phoenix (Ariz.) Gazette on Zoe Baird:

Strike two. Bill Clinton must now turn to his third choice for attorney general.

Clinton's first selection, Judge Patricia Wald of the U.S. Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit, turned him down. His second choice, Zoe Baird, has withdrawn her nomination to save Clinton further embarrassment over her knowingly breaking federal immigration law.

For a president who boasted about his personal participation in the Cabinet selection process, Clinton's administration is off with a stumble.

When Clinton accepted the Democratic nomination for president, he said he did so, "in the name of all the people who do the work, pay the taxes, raise the kids and play by the rules — the hard-working Americans who make up our forgotten middle class."

And yet, fully informed of Baird's legal transgression, her decision not to play by U.S. immigration rules, Clinton still deemed her worthy — as did members of the Senate judiciary committee ... until the phones started ringing in their Senate offices.

DAVID EUGENE FRESE

Farrell Library, stack level 7B. To get there you have to duck through an old window in the original 1912 library.

The floors, once glass, are covered with plywood. The air is a musty dark. The smell: the age of fading pages.

Someday, no one will go there but librarians. Someday, there will be no walls to that building, old and ancient. Someday, we will not need libraries.

In the old country, it was the monks who used to sit somewhat celibate and copy the texts of books by hand. Then came wooden type, followed by metal, followed by movable letters that didn't have to be thrown away after every use.

Now I sit at a computer terminal with built-in dictionary and thesaurus and footnote option that I swore would never wean me from a manual typewriter. But it did.

It took a span of 400 years — the same amount of time it took for us to enslave one nation and destroy another.

France is building the next step in libraries, I read in the premiere issue of Wired yesterday. The Bibliotheque de France will be a library without walls, where browsers will simply sit at a computer workstation and browse not only for titles, but for entire texts scanned onto the screen.

A book from across the Atlantic Ocean will no longer be a matter of months but seconds before it can be accessed by the terminal thousands of miles away.

Soon, Farrell Library will be the size of a Macintosh computer. Someday smaller.

This is all good and fine, I realize. No longer will a slack-off state legislature be able to put the burden of financing a university library on the backs of state students.

The tree-hugging weirdos will have an orgy of Grecian bliss once trees are no longer pulled down for the latest Danielle Steele.

But the dangers. Those are unforeseen.

Another point. Much to my shame, I watched all three of the "Amy Fisher Stories" and the subsequent parodies on Saturday Night Live, Late Night, the Tonight Show, Arsenio, and on and on. I must tell you it was not intentional. The three nights I watched television that month all coincided with those programs.

The events portrayed and parodied happened three months before. Three months. Some of the turnarounds are shorter; America's Most Wanted has last month's crimes. Rescue shows have last week's true-life dramas.

A murder tomorrow is Monday's movie-of-the-week. History opens Friday at theaters everywhere. We are all merely one tragedy and three months away from becoming television characters.

In the news business, tales of fear run rampant in trade publications. Newspapers will fade when an interested subscriber has a modem and a terminal to pick from a menu of news events.

Want to read state news? Select the "state" option on your electronic newspaper and the state news pops up on the screen. You will not be bothered by headlines of news in Somalia or the Supreme Court and other things uninteresting to you.

Some may say this is neato. I fear it. My grandchildren will look at my books in my grandfather house and tire of my stories of the Old Days when men and women were who they were because of the books they had read not "accessed," by God.

Someone, a relative I imagine, once asked me not long ago why I wrote and wanted to be a writer. I told them it was my only marketable skill. So it follows that perhaps this fear of a Time Without Books is an economic one.

But I fear we will become a nation and someday a world of quoters. We will cite passages from an entire book we have never read. Like those who say women must submit to husbands without reading the rest of Paul's letter to the Ephesians. Or the Bible for that matter.

The future is halfway here. Cliff's Notes and video stores are replacing the Great Works. I can access a dictionary on my computer to look up "ominous" for a definition of "imminent, foreboding, impending." I can not browse to see old. Oink. Olivine. Oligocene. Omnipresent. These words are not listed in my computer's dictionary.

The stacks in Farrell, they stand with me. Aging. Yellowing. Smelling like yesterday's news. Someday, like history, we will not be needed.

▶ ABORTION

Columnist reasoning cold as an icicle cake

Editor,

I would like to congratulate John Hart for his editorial, "Pro-choice platform built on shaky foundation." I found it to be clearly written, concise and cogent. I also found it to be chilling.

He argues that abortion is murder and should, therefore, be illegal. By this logic, all abortions should be outlawed.

In this country, every year, innumerable women are brutally, viciously and violently raped. Should those who conceive because they were raped be forced by society to carry the child against their will?

Should the young, innocent victim of incest have to give birth to her father's child or her own brother?

And the woman for whom the pregnancy would endanger her health, should she be made to risk her life?

If you follow John Hart's logic, the answer to all these women is yes.

I say the answer is no, because I don't believe in a God that deals only with cold absolutes. I believe in a God that is warm and generous and caring, who says to the rape victim, "You don't have to carry a child conceived in painful attack." Who says to a child, "You don't have to carry to fruition the seed of your father's evil," and says to the woman who shouldn't carry, "You don't have to risk your life."

That is why, for me, Mr. Hart's argument, and answer, is cold.

Child care just isn't what it used to be ...

BRAD SEABOURN

"I think I know what she went through," said my friend Wilbur as he tapped his mug and beckoned to the bartender for a refill.

You think you know what?

"I'm sayin' I know what our former wanna-be attorney general, Zoe Baird, was talkin' about when she said it was tough findin' good help for takin' care of all the poor little 'rug monkeys' around the country whose yuppie moms and even yuppier dads both have to work."

Come on, Wilbur. You have to be, what, close to 60, right? In fact, you are not much older than most of those United States senators at Ms. Baird's Senate confirmation hearing. So, how could you possibly know what she, or any, struggling young parent is going through in this day and age of two-income households — not that I call anyone making more than $500,000 a year in salary "struggling." You could probably hire half of Mexico to babysit with that kind of income.

"I just know, I tell ya! You seem to think just because my wife is at home now, that it was always that way. Well, let me tell you, pal, we had some rough times. Back then it wasn't all 'Dick Van Dyke' and 'Leave It To Beaver' for everybody ya know. Maybe some of them senators had it easy with all their poopy-do maids, nannies and chauffeurs and what-not, but we had it tough."

You are saying, then, that there was a period of time while raising your family that both you and your wife had to work to make ends meet?

"Damn tootin'. And we didn't have any 'Curtain-Climber Care' or any of them other yuppie baby-sitter businesses to watch our kids."

So, how did you handle it?

"Handle what?"

Taking care of the kids.

"Well, my wife worked days cleaning house for people that could afford such niceties, so, right from Day One when she first started to work, I just told her, 'Find somebody.' Why, she bitched and moaned for weeks until she finally found someone. Like to drove me to drinkin' I'll tell ya."

And?

"And what?"

Who did you finally hire to take care of the kids?

"We finally got her mother to come over. You know how grandmothers are. She just loved it. In fact, she didn't charge us a thing. But ... and this was a big 'but,' she'd only do it during the day while my wife worked."

So what did you do for all those other occasions when a sitter was needed, you know, like when you and the wife wanted to go to a movie or a concert or a business Christmas party or maybe you just wanted to get away from it all and spend a nice quiet weekend making whoopee at the local Best Western?

"I'd just come home and when the wife got home from work I'd just tell her, 'Find somebody.' And she would bitch and moan for weeks until she finally found someone. Like to drove me to drinkin' I'll tell ya."

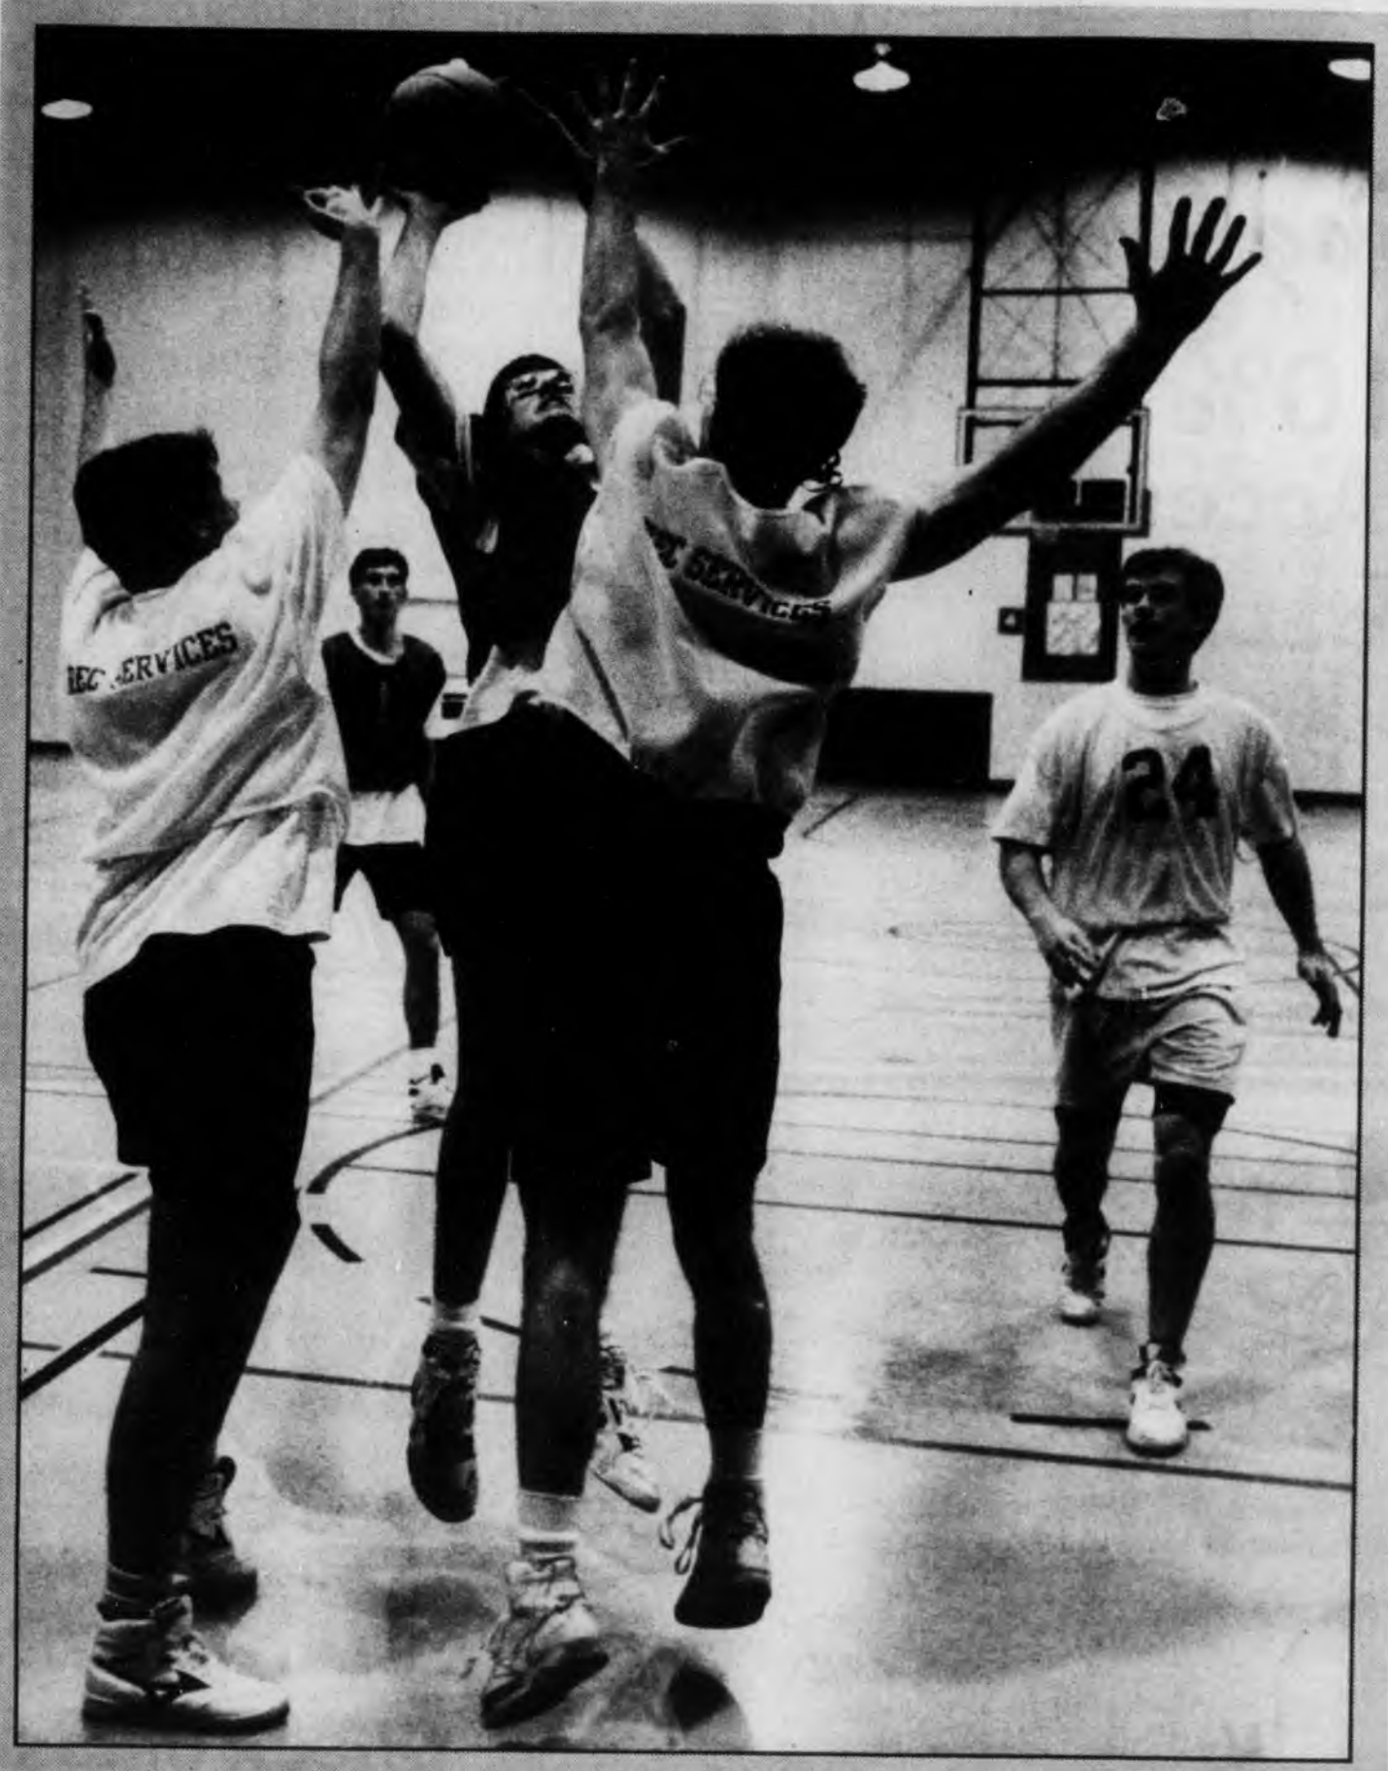
And?

"And what?"

Who did she finally find to take care of the kids?

"We'd get one of the older kids to watch the younger ones and let the older ones take care of themselves. When they was real little buggers though, we had a neighbor girl come over and watch 'em. We had one of the first TV's on the block, so we'd just turn on the idiot box, give her some popcorn, and she was as happy as a flea in a dog's ear. Didn't cost us a thing."

Yes, I would have to agree with you, Wilbur. You and all those senators truly understand the child care dilemma.



"See. Just like I said."

And your wife ... I suppose she feels the same way as you do?

My wife? Ha! She's always worryin' and bitchin' and moanin' about somethin'. Why, just before I came here, our daughter called sayin' she was havin' trouble findin' someone to watch the grandkids while she works. And her husband don't even lift a finger, the lousy bum. Worked the wife into a fine mood, it did. So I got outta the house and came down here. I tell ya, sometimes its enough to ..."

... Drive you to drinking. I think I understand, Wilbur.

Bartender? How about another one for my buddy Wilbur.

COLUMN

Athletes shouldn't be given allowances

Originally, I had planned on having a little fun with today's column and sharing a few of my favorite Super Bowl highlights.

I don't mean game-by-game, but even better, those things that only happen under the intense magnifying glass of the media during "Hype Week" that always precedes the biggest — and most watched — athletic event of the year.

Things like Jim McMahon mooning a low-flying helicopter during practice in Miami in 1985, or Buffalo's Thurman Thomas misplacing his helmet and missing the first two plays of last year's game.

TROY COVERDALE

But, then, as I glanced at yesterday's front page headline, plans changed.

"Athletes ask for allowance."

The gist of that "startling" front-page article is that scholarship athletes on this very campus don't have much in the way of money and would like a few extra greenbacks to spend here and there.

Who wouldn't?

But for athletes to be complaining to their fellow students that they need money isn't the way to go.

In fact, that just makes the average student more cynical.

As college students, we all have our financial sacrifices. Come to think of it, so do most of our parents.

I am here on student loan money and help from my parents.

My younger brother is the same way, with some scholarship money thrown in, but his isn't the "full ride" like these athletes get.

I work to earn three paychecks.

For what?

To enjoy Kraft Macaroni and Cheese every once in a while rather than the cheap stuff.

Meanwhile, some of the tax money your parents pay goes towards funding "full-ride" scholarships at K-State.

In other words, they help pay for an athlete's room, board, books, tuition, fees and transportation. Your parents, as taxpayers, are helping pay for an athlete's education as well as possibly paying for yours.

And, yet, these athletes want an allowance?

The NCAA doesn't allow for universities to provide an "allowance" of any kind to student-athletes, and if it did, the case would set an unwelcome precedent.

Administrators would find themselves having to explain why participants in "The Pride of Wildcat Land" Marching Band weren't also getting an allowance, considering they are under the auspices of the athletic department.

And what about members of the lacrosse team?

Would they — and all members of club sports, for that matter — be afforded the same type of treatment, as they also receive money from the athletic department?

Part of the problem can rest on society (I know, it's overused, but try to bear with me).

Our society places so much emphasis on sports and on what happens with athletes both on and off the playing surface.

This week is a prime example. Everywhere you turn — including this very sports page — there is another story about Buffalo and Dallas playing in what over the past few years has turned into the "Super Bomb."

But everyone still thinks that the Super Bowl is the end-all of sports, and wants to be informed about who was arrested for partying too much the night before the game.

Athletes, meanwhile, are used to getting it all handed to them on a silver platter.

Yes, they do their work on the practice field and in the games, but because they are athletes, they get treated as "special people."

It's not the easiest thing to be a student. It's even harder to be a student-athlete and under the microscope set up by the NCAA.

Under those two terms — "student" and "athlete" — they have to meet stringent grade requirements, can't take "gifts" and have to watch the people they associate with.

But, that still doesn't change the fact that the average student can't help, and really could care less, when those student athletes say they need an allowance.

We aren't the people to talk to about the problem.

The athletes who don't like the situation should try talking to the people whose job it is to care — the NCAA.

NATIONAL FOOTBALL LEAGUE

The Bowl just might be Super

ASSOCIATED PRESS

LOS ANGELES — The play is the thing. The big play.

Long touchdowns and critical turnovers are exactly what fans hope to see in the Super Bowl. A 100-yard kickoff return? Sure. A darting 60-yard dash to the end zone? Love it.

With two high-octane offenses featuring breakaway threats in virtually every skill position, the public might get just what it wants Sunday — in a big way.

"Our team doesn't worry about who gets the publicity or who doesn't," Cowboys receiver Alvin Harper said. "We're just happy for one another, and it seems to work out that a lot of different guys get the attention after making the big plays."

Players such as Harper, whose 70-yard catch and run clinched Dallas' victory at San Francisco in the NFC title game. Players such as Michael Irvin, whose statistics (78 catches, 1,396 yards and seven touchdowns) don't lie.

Players such as Troy Aikman, who can deliver whatever kind of pass it takes to lift the Cowboys, but who understands that "it's a lot easier if we don't have to win that way."

"I don't care what my numbers look like," Aikman said, "but I realize for us to have a chance, I'll have to play well and have some big plays."

But the Bills believe the one place Dallas will look for the major game-breaking contribution will be in the backfield.

Who can blame the Cowboys for turning first and foremost to Emmitt Smith, the NFL's two-time rushing champion?

On his way to 1,713 yards and 18 touchdowns, Smith had runs of 68, 51, 31 and 29 twice, not to mention a whole bunch of other 20-plus rushes. In the most crucial situations, Smith gets the ball. He usually gets the first down, the touchdown or whatever is needed.

SUPER BOWL
Sunday, Jan. 31
At Pasadena, Calif.
Buffalo vs. Dallas, 6:18 p.m.

"I've seen Emmitt hit some holes on film and it just amazes me," Bills star defensive end Bruce Smith said. "Once he gets into the secondary, there's not too many guys around who can catch him."

Emmitt Smith has even said he dreams of being the Super Bowl MVP. That, he admitted, "means making some big-time plays."

It also means Dallas preventing Buffalo's suddenly powerful defense from making the same kind of plays. The Bills have allowed 16 points since falling behind Houston 35-3 in the first playoff game.

To Buffalo, defensive success means making Aikman uncomfortable, forcing him to throw at the wrong time or to the wrong receiver. Then safeties Henry Jones (eight interceptions) and Mark Kelso (seven) can pounce.

Of course, the Cowboys didn't get this far with a mistake-prone attack. Rather, they are very protective of the ball — just nine lost fumbles, 15 interceptions — and the man who throws it — just 23 sacks of Aikman.

"They hit you short a lot, then they strike deep with a big play," Bills cornerback Nate Odomes said. "They have a very controlled and efficient offense, and we're going to have to do a good job to take the big play away from them.

"We are going to have to put some licks on Aikman — get some pressure on him. We can't let him have a picnic. We have to make it a hard game for him, not just let him stand in the pocket and enjoy himself."

The Bills, with their formidable offense built around the no-huddle, can match Aikman, Smith, Irvin, Harper and tight end Jay Novacek with Jim Kelly, Thurman Thomas, Andre Reed and James Lofton. Dallas brings the league's top-ranked defense to the Rose Bowl.

"Anytime you have great players on the offense like they have, they are going to make great plays," Cowboys linebacker Ken Norton Jr. said. "We've got to understand once they make a great play, it's not the end of the game."

Maybe it will be just the start of a big game, filled with big plays.

Lady Cats look to snap 7-game slump

BRIAN ANDERSON
Collegian

The Lady Hawks play the slumping Lady Cats Thursday night in Bramlage Coliseum.

No, it's not the Lady Jayhawks of Kansas. It's the Lady Hawks of Quincy College.

Coach Susan Yow said her team thinks it can win against the Division II school with a record of 8-10.

"The players believe in themselves every time they go on the court," Yow said. "They thought they could beat Iowa State and Wichita State."

The Lady Cats lost to both the Cyclones and the Shockers, who had a combined 8-21 record coming into the game.

K-State will try to end a seven-game losing streak.

Last season, the Lady Cats had an 11-game losing stretch at the end of the season. Yow said it's hard to stop the snowball effect of losing.

"Once you get a streak of losses, I think they have the same effect from one year to the next," said Yow, whose team started the season 5-0. "If you experienced it before and use that experience in a positive way, it will help you overcome the next time it occurs and be stronger of it.

"If I had the solution, I wouldn't be in this mess," she said. "Wichita had the will to win, and we didn't."

Yow said that the Lady Hawk players have been told they can beat K-State.

"They'll see this as a really big game for them," she said. "The coach will remind them that we have been beaten on our court by so-called inferior opponents. He is going to say we are beatable."

Quincy returns 10 letter-winners, as well as three starters, from last year's 11-17 team. The Lady Hawks have four of the five starters scoring in double-digits, led by forward Cara Vaughan with 12.1 points a game and team-high 7.3 rebounds a contest.

Other double-digit players are Mary Cundiff at an 11.7 average, Cindy Capesius with 10.4 points per game and Amy Flesner with 10.9.

Assistant coach Sue Doran said she expects most of scoring to come from tall players.

"They are an inside-oriented team," Doran said of the Lady Hawks' three 6-foot players. "They'll bang the ball inside."

Another problem is the 3-point shooting of Jenni Niemira, who has connected on 35 3-pointers out of 107 attempts.

"If we sag inside on their offense, she'll be open for the shot," Doran said.

Doran said Quincy would play man-to-man defense and press the Lady Cats full-court.

K-State turns around to play Kansas at 2 p.m. Sunday in Bramlage Coliseum.

LAWRENCE, Kan. (AP) — Kansas forward Darrin Hancock will have laser surgery on both eyes to repair a series of four retinal tears and will be out for a week, Coach Roy Williams said Wednesday. Hancock will wear protective goggles for the rest of the season.

▶YOUNG HONORED BY NFL

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Steve Young, the first quarterback in NFL history to post 100-plus point ratings in consecutive seasons, was named the NFL Player of the Year Wednesday.

He led San Francisco to a 14-2 record by passing for 3,465 yards and 25 touchdowns.

▶BIG 8 TEAMS POST WINS

Three Big Eight teams flexed their conference muscles Wednesday night, beating up on non-conference opponents.

The 20th-ranked Oklahoma Sooners ended their two-game losing streak with a 146-65 pummeling of Florida A&M. The Rattlers, now 3-13, committed 43 turnovers and shot just 37 percent.

The Missouri Tigers, paced by Mark Atkins 17 points, beat up on Notre Dame, 73-57. The Irish made just 33 percent of its shots.

And the Iowa State Cyclones, taking on the 8-6 Drake Bulldogs, rolled to a 119-81 win in Ames.

NEW ADMINISTRATION

Search continues for attorney general

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — President Clinton continued his search for an attorney general Wednesday, although one senior official said the process was moving slowly.

"The list ain't short," the aide said.

Clinton wants to fill the position soon to put Zoe Baird's embarrassing withdrawal behind the young administration. Also, the new attorney general must deal with FBI Director William Sessions, who is challenging a Justice Department finding of improprieties on his part.

But the president has warned aides to take their time and do the job right. Clinton has taken the blame for rushing the choice of Baird to meet his self-imposed deadline.

Baird withdrew her nomination amid a storm of public criticism of her hiring illegal immigrants and failing to pay Social Security taxes for them.

The administration official, speaking anonymously, said Clinton is balancing the search with his work on the economy and efforts to lift the ban on gays in the military.

Clinton aides said they did not think the president had interviewed any prospects. During the transition, Clinton nearly always met personally with candidates before nominating them.

Administration officials say several prospects are still under consideration, and it could be next week before Clinton settles on a nominee.

Among those being considered are U.S. District Judge A. Leon Higginbotham Jr. of Philadelphia, Yale Law Professor Drew Days and Washington lawyer Charles F.C. Ruff.

Other prospects mentioned include New York State Appeals Court Judge Judith Kaye, 2nd U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals Judge Amalya Kearse, Stanford University professor and former Carter administration Justice Department official Barbara Babcock, and Marian Wright Edelman, head of the Children's Defense Fund and a close friend of Hillary Rodham Clinton.

Federal appellate judge Richard Arnold of Little Rock, Ark., and Little Rock, Ark., attorney Webb Hubbell were mentioned early as prospects, but are not thought to be on any current lists, officials said.

'Dirty' agents arrested for money laundering

ASSOCIATED PRESS

MIAMI — Four federal agents were snared in a U.S. Customs sting aimed at uncovering lawmen who allegedly ripped off drug dealers and laundered the money, authorities said Wednesday.

It was believed to be the largest number of federal agents ever arrested at one time, said Leonard Freedman, regional internal affairs director for customs.

One FBI agent and three customs agents were charged with stealing and laundering $200,000, he said.

"We're not going to tolerate any of these characters working in law enforcement," Freedman said. "These are anomalies who stole and laundered money."

He said it was possible more agents were involved, and that charges could be expanded after search warrants were served.

One customs agent in Miami, Orlando White, 42, was the original target of the 18-month investigation, Freedman said.

Customs internal affairs had received information that White was "dirty," said Freedman, who refused to elaborate.

He said the investigation of White led to the other agents — the FBI's Louis Reveiz, 27, brother of NFL place kicker Fuad Reveiz of the Minnesota Vikings, and Customs agents Alcides Licona of Miami, 47, and Ricardo Laurel of Houston, 37.

"They were all friends," Freedman said. Deals were often sealed with gold Rolex watches and other expensive gifts, said a federal law enforcement source who spoke on condition of anonymity.

The four agents have been charged with theft of government property and money laundering so far, Freedman said.

The sting began in August 1991 when White was approached by a customs informant with a plan to rip off $80,000 to $100,000 from a fictitious "black guy-career criminal," according to a federal affidavit.

White was reluctant at first but eventually went to the hotel room of the supposed trafficker and stole $82,000 agents had planted there, the affidavit said. Unknown to him, customs videotaped the burglary. White allegedly kept $30,000 of the cash, said the affidavit.

Reveiz, whose girlfriend, Laureen Mayor, 34, managed a Great Western Savings Bank branch in suburban Miami, was approached to launder drug money, according to the affidavit. He put the informant in touch with Mayor, and she agreed to open an account under a phony name and later transfer $75,000 to a foreign account, the affidavit said.

Hotline assists unemployed

K-State project helps Kansans find job opportunities

JENNIFER SWANSON
Collegian

Since February 1991, a campus-based program has helped 2,645 unemployed Kansans find a way to get back to work.

The Kansas Worker's Re-Entry Hotline is a program designed to help people who are without work find job training and other programs that will assist them in re-entering the work force, Ted Harms, director of the Kansas Rural Works Project, said.

"There is an immense number of Kansans who have worked a long time with excellent work history, who have never been out of a job before and don't know where to go," Harms said. "We get these people in touch with service providers in their area who can get them back into the work force."

The Re-Entry Hotline is a cooperative project of the Farmers Assistance Counseling and Training Service agency of the Kansas Board of Agriculture and the Kansas Department of Human Resources.

The hot line is toll free and in service from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m., Monday through Friday. The hot line uses an answering machine after hours, on weekends and on holidays.

The purpose of the Re-Entry Hotline, Harms said, is to gather information about the caller's work history, educational level and current situation.

The information gathered is used to determine which local, state and federal programs the caller may be eligible for.

Sandra Ninas-Scheffel, Re-Entry Hotline specialist and a marriage and family therapist, answers calls on the hot line and does general program matches.

The information she collects from callers is shared with only one other person, an outreach technician.

Five outreach technicians, Ninas-Scheffel said, are located strategically throughout the state and have more localized financial and educational resources to better serve callers.

Outreach technicians also coordinate and facilitate free job search skills workshops for people in small Kansas towns.

Harms said these types of workshops, which teach value identification, job search, resume and interviewing skills, were only available in large cities until now.

Stan Ward, director of the FACTS program, said he has been surprised at the success of the program.

"It's been considerably more of a success than any of us imagined," Ward said. "We have tapped an underserved need at a greatly appropriate time."

Grant emphasizes food safety concerns

MICHELLE SMITH
Collegian

Food safety is one of the top 10 issues facing the food industry, and a federal grant will help Cooperative Extension address the problem in Kansas.

The USDA Food Safety and Quality Initiative will be used to improve the safety of food throughout Kansas.

Karen Penner, associate professor and extension specialist in foods and nutrition; Carol Shanklin, professor of hotel and restaurant management and dietetics and extension assistant; and Betsy Barrett, extension assistant for food and nutrition, will use the grant to implement a food service sanitation and certification program.

Penner petitioned for the grant after holding 16 public policy forums throughout the state. The forums were targeted at people in the food industry. The forums showed that food safety was a concern.

"One of the top 10 issues to face restaurateurs and managers is food safety," Barrett said.

Instead of individually training every manager in Kansas, the plan is to train county extension agents.

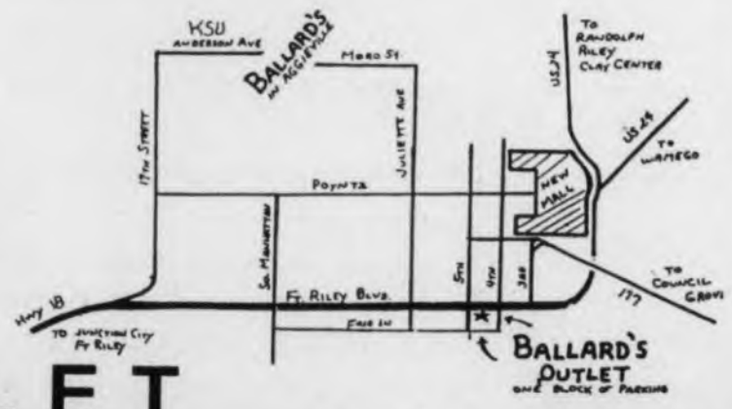
"My goal in the next three years is to get all the home economists in the state trained," Penner said.

These county agents can then take the information back to their county, where it will be available to any interested parties. Although the training will be available, sanitation certification will not be required of food service establishments.

The training program that will be used is provided by the Educational Foundation of the National Restaurant Association. Titled SELFSERV, the training includes videos, slides, lecture materials, group discussions, textbooks and a standardized test.

When the training is completed, the test is sent back to the Educational Foundation for scoring, Penner said.

In addition to agent training, Barrett will start training with individual food service establishments in Manhattan. Barrett said she will first observe the establishment, concentrating on the flow of the food.



The emphasis of the observation will be on critical control points, areas were there is a potential for food contamination. Of special concern is the temperature at which susceptible products are stored and for how long, Barrett said.

After observation, she will conduct training sessions with the employees.

The first training session for extension agents is scheduled for April 6,7 and 8.

Cheating still prevalent on campus, survey says

ing was on tests. Ninety-three of the 190 surveyed had cheated on tests. Running second was copying homework, which 90 students admitted to.

Other students on campus, when asked about their own cheating experiences, were candid as well.

A junior in speech pathology admitted to cheating in the past but said she had never been caught.

"I took a class where we graded our own quizzes right after taking them," she said. "I would fill in the answers as we graded."

The quizzes combined to equal one test, the student said.

A junior in education said she had received help from another student on papers, but didn't consider that cheating.

"I consider it editing my work, since the thoughts were mine," she said. "If it had been totally rewritten it would be cheating."

The survey encompassed students ranging in age from 17 to 29 and included a wide variety of majors. It showed little significant difference in propensity to cheat between classes and majors.

Bosnian officials ask Clinton for weapons in camps in the former Yugoslavia by Serbs, Croats and Muslims.

"We should have a right to defend ourselves," Ejup Ganic, a member of the Bosnian presidency, told reporters as his group called on White House officials.

The Bosnians vowed to keep fighting against Serbian forces to maintain their country's independence.

Meanwhile, it was learned Secretary of State Warren M. Christopher would go to the United Nations on Monday with Madeleine Albright, the new U.S. ambassador, but it was not clear whether he would take the occasion to push for enforcement of a no-fly zone over Bosnia.

There have been more than 300 Serbian flights in the past four months, but the U.N. Security Council has not taken steps to apply military pressure on the Serbs.

In another development, three former presidents, Richard M. Nixon, Gerald R. Ford and Ronald Reagan, joined with former British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher, former Secretaries of State Henry A. Kissinger and Alexander M. Haig Jr., and other notables in a full-page advertisement in The Washington Times calling on Clinton and Congress to stop genocide in Bosnia.

Other signers included former Democratic presidential candidates George McGovern and Michael Dukakis, former Defense Secretaries Harold Brown, Melvin Laird and Frank Carlucci and former National Security Adviser Zbigniew Brzezinski.

More than half the country is occupied by Serbian forces, about two-thirds of them from the regular Yugoslav army, the Bosnians said at a news conference.

They said they would accept arms from Arab countries if the new administration did not help them, though U.N. Ambassador Mohamed Sacerbey said "the whole idea is not to make this a Muslim issue." He said Bosnia-Herzegovina considered itself part of Europe.

During the election campaign, President Clinton promised to assist the mostly Muslim government in its war with Serbs from Bosnia and from Serbia. "This is a battle to eradicate a people," Sacerbey said.

"In our conversations with some of these individuals, we have been left with the impression we should not be disappointed," he said.

Soldiers suffer radiation exposure

Gulf War troops caught in friendly fire at greater risk

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — Several dozen U.S. soldiers were exposed to minor amounts of radiation in the Gulf War, and the Army did not provide proper warnings or training for the hazards, according to a draft General Accounting Office report.

The exposures resulted partly from "friendly fire" rounds containing depleted uranium — shells that penetrated Abrams tanks and Bradley fighting vehicles, the GAO said in the draft obtained Wednesday by the Associated Press.

Depleted uranium is a slightly radioactive material used to toughen armor piercing rounds and the shielding of some M1A1 Abrams tanks. It ordinarily poses no health risk to tank crews because it is covered by other shielding material.

Some tank crews were exposed when they were near vehicles which accidentally caught fire and ignited ammunition, and some troops assigned to disposal of damaged vehicles may also have been at risk, the congressional investigators concluded.

The GAO did not report any illnesses among those exposed, but noted that preliminary tests on two wounded soldiers showed the presence of uranium in their urine in excess of federal radiation exposure guidelines.

But the levels were far below the amounts which would cause toxic effects, the report said.

Rep. Ron Wyden, D-Ore., who ordered the report as chairman of a House Small Business subcommittee, said he will ask Defense Secretary Les Aspin to conduct a review of the exposure on an expedited basis.

"We should undertake changes to make sure that these exposures are kept to an absolute minimum. It's readily apparent that this sloppy system doesn't deliver that assurance," Wyden said.

The Army "has not effectively educated its personnel in the hazards of DU (depleted uranium) contamination and in proper safety measures..." the report said.

"What little information available is not widely disseminated, and training on DU is basically limited to Abrams tank personnel, munitions handlers and explosive ordnance disposal personnel," the report said.

Other troops, including those responsible for damage assessment and disposal of contaminated vehicles, received no information about the hazards, the GAO said.

"Our review showed that at least several dozen U.S. soldiers, some unknowingly, were exposed" to depleted uranium, often in the form of dust, the report said.

Army and Nuclear Regulatory Commission officials believe the doses did not exceed federal limits established by the NRC, the report said.

But both agencies agreed "the relationship between radiation dosage and health risks at low levels of exposure is not clearly understood, and compliance with the NRC limits does not eliminate the risk of future health problems."

In a Jan. 15 letter to the GAO, Victor H. Reis, a defense department research and engineering official, said the military recognizes the hazards.

"Because of the toxic nature of uranium and because it is prudent to assume there is some risk associated with low level depleted uranium radiation, the DOD will implement precautions for personnel working with contaminated equipment in non-combat situations," Reis said.

He added the military is conducting medical evaluations on those exposed and as a result of lessons learned in Operation Desert Storm, "the Army will develop plans for future recovery of depleted uranium contaminated equipment."

The Army "will implement appropriate training for all personnel" who may work on this equipment, the letter said.

The report said 15 Bradleys and 14 Abrams tanks were contaminated in the war.

LA policemen on trial for civil rights charges

ASSOCIATED PRESS

LOS ANGELES — The Rodney King beating returns to the forefront next week as four white police officers face federal civil rights charges in a case likely to test the mettle of the justice system and the nerves of the city.

Dominating the proceeding is the memory of the officers' acquittal on most charges in last spring's state trial, triggering three days of deadly riots.

The city says it's preparing for the worst.

Legal experts say that background is sure to complicate the federal trial and selection of an impartial jury.

"I don't think there's any process in the legal system that can erase the memory of what went before," said Loyola University law professor Sam Pillsbury. "It is going to have an impact on the case."

Jury selection is scheduled to begin Feb. 3 with distribution of questionnaires to some 350 prospective jurors.

With this trial re-examining the same facts aired in the state trial, some have questioned whether the outcome can be just.

Attorney Michael Stone, who represents Officer Lawrence Powell, said he hopes the public is prepared for acquittals.

"The community should not be expecting guilty verdicts," he said. "If they are, we're going to have trouble. The public should look at this like any other case.

"The public has to understand it's not a slam-dunk," Stone said.

Powell and Officers Theodore Briseno, Timothy Wind and Sgt. Stacey Koon are charged with violating King's civil rights on March 3, 1991.

The black motorist was clubbed and kicked after a freeway chase — a scene captured on an amateur cameraman's videotape. The tape's broadcast sparked nationwide protests of police brutality.

Pretrial coverage in the Los Angeles Times has focused on the prosecution case, suggesting prosecutors have new witnesses who will turn the tide toward conviction.

The newspaper has published large sections of secret grand jury transcripts that include testimony from King, who did not testify at the state trial, and from civilians who claim they saw the incident from a distance and could tell King was not at fault.

King is quoted as saying in the grand jury transcripts:

"My whole body went numb after the first blow to the head. ... I felt beat up and like a crushed can. That's what I felt like, like a crushed can all over, and my spirits were down, real low."

Because there is no defense cross-examination of grand jury witnesses, there is no inkling of how their testimony might be affected by defense questioning at the actual trial.

The state prosecutor, Deputy District Attorney Terry White, has said he didn't put King on the stand because he feared King could not withstand intensive cross-examination.

The rioting after the state trial caused nearly $1 billion in damage, and more than 50 people died.

In preparation for the new trial, Mayor Tom Bradley is sending peacemakers door-to-door. The Police Department wants to spend $1 million for state-of-the-art riot gear.

"Anybody who tells you what is going to happen is simply guessing," said Deputy Mayor Mark Fabiani. "The mood is very tense. We're preparing for the worst but hoping for the best."

Can the system handle a second trial of this case?

"In this particular context, people's view of whether the system works depends on their preconceived opinion of how the case should come out," said Peter Arenella, a University of California, Los Angeles, law professor. "The public has made up its mind and is waiting to see if the verdict agrees with their view."

News you want. News you get. KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

YOU'RE ASKING ME?

by Cassandra Duveaux

Oh, the woes of waiting and waiting for a spot on the lot

DEAR CASSANDRA,

I realize this question may be a little out of your league since it doesn't relate to sex or the dating game, but we thought maybe you could help anyway. The problem is about proper parking lot etiquette at K-State.

I have spent more time in the parking lot behind Waters Hall than I even have in credit hours, just waiting for a parking space. The present system seems to consist of two cars at either end of an aisle. As soon as a departing student reaches his or her car, the closer of the two waiters gets the up-and-coming spot.

The problem begins when people arrive late and cruise the lot until likely looking suspects appear to be heading to their cars. The cruisers tailgate these people to their vehicles and proceed to block aisles and steal spots from people who may have been waiting as long as an hour.

My question is this: Don't I owe it to myself and patient, lot-sitting lizards everywhere to maim or annihilate the rude person who has cheated and stolen my long-awaited spot? (After all, I really could use a new bug-screen on the front of my truck.)

As you can see, this is really a moral and social dilemma of epic proportions. So, I'll be eagerly awaiting your answer.

A Frustrated Lot Lizard

DEAR LIZARD,

I can tell you have a lot of anger pent up inside you.

Granted, parking can be a confusing and frustrating affair, but I would strongly discourage you from taking drastic measures. No one wins when people play games with traffic safety.

The proper way to decide to who gets a parking space (assuming two cars arrive at about the same time) is as follows:

The driver of car one smiles at the driver of car two and gestures for her to take the available parking space. The driver of car two politely shakes her head and mouths "No, I couldn't. You take it."

The driver of car one, not wanting to appear rude or selfish, waves off her offer, laughs visibly and again motions for the driver of car two to accept the parking spot.

The driver of car two, to avoid appearing opportunistic, sticks her head out her window and yells, "You're probably late for class, and I'm sure you were here first. You take the spot. I'll skip class."

The driver of car one, feeling pangs of guilt, considers suggesting a coin toss but realizes such an offer could appear self-serving. So he decides to offer to park the lady's car for her in the available spot.

Not wanting to seem unappreciative, the driver of car two accepts the offer and allows the driver of car one to park her car. The driver of car one then exits his vehicle and commits hari-kari as a final gesture of gentility.

If this method doesn't work, I recommend allowing the first waiting driver to take the spot. If someone cuts you off, don't fret. They'll get theirs someday.

CATEGORIES

To help you find what you are looking for, the classified ads have been arranged by category and sub-category. All categories are marked by one of the large images, and sub-categories are preceded by a number designation.

TIPS FOR WRITING A CLASSIFIED AD

Always put what item or service you are advertising first. This helps potential buyers find what they are looking for.

Don't use abbreviations. Many buyers are confused by abbreviations.

Consider including the price. This tells buyers if they are looking at something in their price range.

WE DO NOT USE PHONE NUMBERS OR LAST NAMES IN PERSONALS.
